VOL. 63 THE LEDGER OF THOMAS SPEED 1681–1690

The impudent entry for 'Sir' Jahzeel Speed, flaunting a sum of over £400 appropriated by himself (f. 33.4D). Note that it is entered as a balance carried forward from the previous ledger, i.e. was already history. It also is a good example of Jahzeel's hand.

This account (f. 136.5C) is mostly in Speed's own hand, but has been closed off by the unknown person who wrote up the Ledger in 1689–90. Samuel Kekewich was his factor in Cadiz, and Isaac Heming his son-in-law and London banker. There is a picture of the Cadiz Merchant on the front cover. The shipping mark drawn in the margin of this account appears on the back cover.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS & DEDICATION

This work is a spin-off from my doctoral thesis 'The Life & Times of Thomas Speed' and owes much to my then supervisors Madge Dresser of UWE and Jonathan Barry of Exeter University. I did most of the original transcription and the associated research in the Bristol Record Office, where the archivists are unfailingly helpful. The Council of the Bristol Record Society have been encouraging, none more so than Dr Joseph Bettey who has done so much for the history of this region. The result has greatly benefited from the wise advice of the Record Society editor Dr Peter Fleming, but I alone must be responsible for the remaining faults.

Thanks are due to Colonel High Dunsterville on behalf of the Goldney family and to the Bristol Record Office for permission to publish the facsimile images which accompany this volume, and to the Maritime Museum at Greenwich for permission to use the picture of the Cadiz Merchant on the cover. I should also like to thank all those at 4word for the pains they have taken in setting a very troublesome text.

My family have been not only tolerant but positively supportive. This volume is dedicated, with love, to Bertha, Cathy, Croc, Dilys, Jenny and Simon.

INTRODUCTION

1 THE DOCUMENT

Accounts do not always make interesting reading. But the Ledger of Thomas Speed gives us a unique insight into the work, the life, and the values of a successful Bristol merchant in the late 17th century.

The ledger is held in the Bristol Record Office. ¹ It is catalogued as a ledger of Thomas Speed; and the naming of people like 'Isaac Heming my sonne in law' places it unmistakably as his. It belongs to the Goldney family, very likely having come into their hands when that family inherited Speed's house in Small Street around 1709, and was deposited in the Record Office in 1974...

1.1 Description

The Ledger is a single volume approximately 46 by 29 by 6 cm. It has a leather cover tooled with 'Leadger E Begun 12 december Anno Domini 1681' (see cover). ²

The left and right hand sides of the open Ledger form a pair, and the left-hand page is numbered. Speed refers to such a double page as one 'folio'. Folios 1–184 are well preserved. Folio 185 has some minor gaps. Folio 186 is substantially impaired but can be reconstructed. No items are cross-referenced to any folio number greater than 194 and nearly all open accounts are closed off to 'Profit & Loss' (i.e. written off) or to 'Account of Balances' for posting to the next Ledger. It seems clear that the Ledger had been completed and that only a few folios are lost – most of which can be reconstructed from their counter-entries.

In each account, Debit entries are posted to the left hand page and Credit entries to the right. There may be several accounts on a page, but each account has a ruled heading right across the double page, and is closed off by the next so that there is never any confusion about which account the entries belong to. The standard entries, for which columns have been ruled, are for the year and month, the day, the narrative, the number of the folio where the counter-entry is meant to be, and £, s, & d in separate columns. The heading usually contains the year in which it was opened – though the year on the Debit side may differ from the Credit side – followed by the name of the account on at least one side, perhaps with 'Per Contra' on the other.

For reference purposes in this edition I use the folio number and the number of the account on that folio with perhaps D for Debit side and C for Credit. So the reference to Isaac Heming above will be found in f. 77.4D.

Further, in this Introduction, to save a flurry of footnotes, such references are simply bracketed in the main text, without any preliminary.

Speed's Ledger was posted in three hands. From opening until some time in the spring or early summer of 1683 it was in the stylish lettering of Jahzeel, Speed's only surviving son.³ For the next six years it was kept in the untidy cursive script which can be identified from other documents as Speed's own. Accounts from March 1689 are in a third hand, a sort of copper-plate, which I take to be that of a clerk or book-keeper, possibly because Speed's eyesight was failing.⁴ The frontispiece shows and identifies all three hands

1.2 Importance

As accountancy, the Ledger falls easily within the established outlines of seventeenth-century practice for sole traders. But it is in other respects a unique document. First, though Bristol was clearly the second trading port of England, this is the only Bristol merchant's ledger of the period known to survive. In fact there is no other source which gives such a detailed picture of a Bristol merchant's trading over such a stretch of time. More fundamentally, the ledger supplies not only a ten-year trading history but an insight into the rationale and ethos of that trade.

Moreover, the detailed picture which it affords over nine years can be fitted into an outline of Speed's trade over forty years. In fact, Speed himself is by far the most fully documented of all the merchants and of all the Quaker leaders in the city where both so flourished in the second half of the Seventeenth Century. The historical significance of his ledger thus parallels that of John Smythe, another man of consequence, over a century earlier.⁵

The Ledger itself is indeed one of the main sources for the life of Speed the man as well as the merchant. This is not as surprising for a seventeenth-century ledger as it might be today. There was no formal distinction between business and private life. Household expenses were entered in the same account with business overheads. Nevertheless there can be few ledgers with such a story to tell: his abortive retirement, his fourth marriage, his spectacularly disappointing heir, not to mention the mystery of the sinister soap. The Ledger is an unusual human document as well as a business record.

1.3 Sources

The main sources on which this introduction is based are to be found in the notes and the brief Bibliography; but virtually all the topics discussed here are discussed and documented more fully in my thesis 'The Life & Times of Thomas Speed'.⁶

³ He describes Elizabeth Milner (Appendix A, Marriage 1) as 'my sister' (f. 15.6D).

⁴ It is not the hand of his son-in-law Thomas Goldney, the only member of the family who might have undertaken it. Speed bought spectacles in 1684 (f. 73.1D, last entry).

Introduction xi

2 BACKGROUND

2.1 Bristol and its Trade

Bristol's population may have been around 15,000 in 1650 rising towards 20,000 by 1700, making it the third largest city in England after London and Norwich. Perhaps half of the adult males were freemen, with a vote in Parliamentary elections and the right to set up in business. Of these, the overseas merchants enjoyed the greatest esteem and, in repute at least, the greatest wealth. Certainly they made the largest and most influential group of the hundred or so great men who were eligible for the (self-recruiting) City Council and other offices; and the Society of Merchant Venturers (SMV) which represented them was the most weighty of all the trade associations.

As elsewhere in England, merchants and other citizens aligned themselves along a range of political and religious attitudes, from high Tory High Church to Whig Dissenter. But for the most part, civic solidarity and mutual commercial interests kept all in peaceful co-existence and neighbourliness, with rare exceptions when a polarising issue forced choices or when a fanatic was elected to high civic office. Quakers were of course on the dissenting end of this spectrum but, though debarred from such office and indeed legally forbidden to worship, were in most respects integrated into the civic society.

Bristol was without question England's second port. Good access to Southern France, Portugal and Spain had made it a major importer of wines and oil and similar high value goods, still mainly in exchange for textiles. It was a principal port for Ireland where a range of manufactures was sent in exchange for butter and cheese and other primary products. It was equally well-placed for trade with the Americas, although it was not until 1698 that Bristol merchants could legitimately engage in the trafficking of slaves.

Bristol was also the distribution centre for a wide region. In an era when transport was cheaper by water than by land, Bristol had direct access to the coastline of the Bristol Channel from Lands End to St David's Head, to the Welsh borderlands on the Wye, up through the west midlands by the Severn, and to the edges of the Cotswold country via the Avon.

This very considerable hinterland, as much as the maritime links, made Bristol prosperous. As Defoe explained, Bristol merchants had⁸ more independency of London than any other town ...whatsoever exportations they make to any part of the world, they are able to bring the full returns back to their own port and dispose of it there. This is not the case in any other port in England.

That is, other outports could export full consignments or shiploads of staples but had too small a domestic market to absorb the equivalent in luxury foreign goods. So they had to dispose of the surplus in a very competitive London market or have the imports consigned to a regular London associate and get only a share of the proceeds.

A major source for Bristol's overseas trade in this period is the Society of Merchant Venturers' record of the Wharfage Fees which they levied on all imports from overseas in return for maintaining the port facilities. The SMV Wharfage Books run in a complete series from May 1654 to September 1694. They show the same details as the Port Books: consignments from named ships to named merchants by item and quantity; 9 but the surviving Port Books supply only patchy coverage. Figure 1 shows the volume of imports between 1654 and 1694 as derived from the Wharfage Books.

A good part of the wide year-to-year fluctuations is due to variations in harvests and in sailing conditions, so that trends are better shown in the three year moving average. Even these however are by no means steady. War played a great part here but not a consistent one. In particular the third Dutch War of the 1670s was largely confined to the North Sea and may have actually diverted trade to Bristol – thus the decline with the peace; whereas William III's war against France from 1688 was very bad, cutting out a major source of wine and exposing shipping to very active privateers as well as the French navy.

Unfortunately, I have not found any breakdown of this trade at its peak in the mid '70s.¹⁰ For Bristol, as for the nation, the value of seventeenth-century trade can be estimated from Customs and Port records of shipping and consignments. Table 1 gives an analysis of Bristol's trade in 1699/1700 derived from the work of Davis and of Hussey.¹¹

All these calculations are in terms of official values for Port Book purposes. Realised sales values will have been very different, and these estimates can only be indicative. They imply that the value of Bristol's import trade was about one tenth London's and a quarter of the national outport total. The export value is one eighth of London's and rather over a quarter of the outport total. These proportions are consistent with the relative customs revenues.

What comes out very strongly is the dominance of the Atlantic trade, making up virtually 60% of both import and export value. Neither London nor any other outport would have been so strongly westward-oriented. The Iberian and Mediterranean trade appears here more important than that with Nearby Europe, but at this time the import of wines from France had hardly recovered from the war, and Spanish and Portuguese wines were accordingly doing well.

2.2 Merchants

2.2.1 The seventeenth-century merchant

Overseas trade assumed a new importance in the second half of the Seventeenth Century. The English had on the whole overcome the Dutch in war and surpassed them as the leading traders in some parts of the world. Those conflicts had underlined the interdependence of colonial empire, trade and naval power. This nexus became a constant factor in a foreign policy which became more aggressive and ready to support far-flung factories and plantations with force even in times of nominal peace – 'no peace beyond the line'. Domestically, small as trade was in the national economy compared with agriculture, it was obviously the most dynamic sector, it exerted a powerful employment multiplier effect and it was perceived, however illusorily, to be the quickest route to vast wealth. Trade fed the consumer market with more and more novel products and brought them within the reach of more and more consumers. Tobacco became part of the lives of even the labouring classes. The nation became trade-conscious.

Naturally this fomented interest in the figure of the merchant. There was still a view among some scholars, clerics and landed men that the merchant was at best ignoble, concerned with mean matters and contrivances; at worst a vile parasite on the gullibility or needs of others. But there were also those who praised the merchant as a paradigm, and a promoter, of just those versions of the pagan virtues which a civil society required: prudence clearly; justice and temperance in the favourable view; and fortitude in the face of Fortune. The methodical casting of accounts by the merchant was taken as a model of serious Christian self-examination. Moreover the overseas merchant was represented as a knowledgeable man, cognisant of world affairs, languages and foreign parts, skilled in calculation and ripe in practical judgement. This more positive view prevailed as trade itself was recognised as more important, and the gentry readily apprenticed their younger sons to this occupation as a respectable one in a way that brewing or building or inland wholesaling would not have been.

Correspondingly there was a positive flurry of books purporting to impart the necessary knowledge for those who would 'truly merit the generous, nay, I may say, the noble name of Merchant'. But, although diaries and biographies were being written in the Seventeenth Century as never before, the aspiring merchant would find little in the way of business histories to read. Even now, published studies of seventeenth-century merchants do not necessarily tell us much about their trading: being prosopographies, political analyses or biographies of great men of London, who made most of their huge fortunes in government finance. There are some editions of merchants' letters and among these Roseveare's fine treatment of the London firm of Marescoe is outstanding for its setting in the context of the firm's accounts and of current prices and trading terms throughout Western Europe.

There are one or two studies or memoirs of provincial merchants outside Bristol, but the information about their trading is either vague or scrappy.¹⁷ Two previous volumes of the Bristol Record Society give a very comprehensive view of all the activities of seventeenth-century Bristol merchants – other than their costs, sales and profits. Latimer's is an institutional study of their Society, and Sacks writes more about the place of the merchants in the civic polity than their trading. ¹⁸ Studies of Sir Abraham Elton, John Whitson, Edward Colston (albeit more a London merchant than a Bristol one), Thomas Goldney I and II, and Humphrey Hooke, all tell us more of how they spent their fortunes than how they made them. ¹⁹ Thus Speed's Ledger is a unique source for the business of a Bristol merchant in this period.

2.2.2 The Merchant's trade

Traditionally the main purpose of trade and the business of the merchant was the bringing in of imports. Exports were merely the means to that end. In Chaucer's time, the merchant had been very much a one-man-show, taking his goods abroad, and bringing the proceeds in foreign merchandise back with him. But in the early modern period, foreign associates and agents ('factors') advised on markets, disposed of exports, held the proceeds, and purchased on the merchant's behalf. The merchant was freed from time-consuming travels and from the associated need to turn each export into a return cargo as quickly as possible. The bill of exchange likewise freed him from the need to purchase in the market where he sold. The merchant was thus able to participate in a great network of multilateral trade and finance. Indeed, it is not too much to say, with Price, that what a seventeenth-century merchant principally did was to manage his working capital to maintain his credit.²⁰ Yet both associates and bills of exchange remained essentially personal, based on the standing – credit in the wide as well as narrow sense – of the individual merchant; and what Price does not perhaps bring out is the sheer volume of written communication and the care needed to nurture the individual relationships which collectively constituted that credit.²¹ Not for nothing was the term 'correspondent' first applied to a foreign business associate in this century.

3 THE LIFE OF THOMAS SPEED

3.1 Before the Ledger

3.1.1 1623–1654: a fortunate start ²²

Speed was not born to be a merchant. He was the second son of Richard Speed, master of the Almshouse at Sherborne, Dorset, a man of some but small property. In 1640, he went to Oxford, presumably with the intention of taking his degree and seeking a living as a minister. But by 1642 the Civil War had broken out, and Speed did not complete his degree. Although there are no records, I believe that he became a clerk in the Parliamentary forces, preaching in his spare time, came to Bristol when it was taken by Fairfax in 1645, and was then taken on as a trainee by the well-established lawyer William Yeamans.

At any rate, in the late summer of 1647, he married William's daughter, Ann. She was the widow of that Robert Yeamans who had been hanged in May 1643 as leader of a Royalist plot. Yeamans had been a member of the Society of Merchant Venturers, a Councillor from 1639 and Sheriff in 1641/2. He was thus well established as one of the mercantile elite 'the great ones amongst us, Colston, Yeomans, and their brethren'. ²³ Appendix A Marriage 1 shows some of the relationships arising from this marriage.

As a result of this marriage, Speed immediately became a freeman of the City – so entitled to set up in business – and a member of the Society of Merchant Venturers. He had likewise access to the family capital, and to a network of businessmen ready to deal with him and give him credit. As an ex-army clerk he was already familiar with book-keeping, purchasing and payroll; and as to overseas trade, he could learn from his brother-in-law William, already a member of the SMV, and indeed from his wife, who was still trading as Ann Speed in 1654.

Thus this very advantageous marriage gave Speed just about all he would have had as the properly apprenticed scion of a wealthy family, and he seems to have readily embarked on his new career as merchant and as an active Merchant Venturer. In 1649/50 he became one of the ten Assistants. From then to early 1655 he was a frequent member of committees including that for revising the Society's ordinances in 1653/4. There is no information on the scope of Speed's trade in this period. But the government records show that he was involved in the transportation of horses and Irish prisoners to the Indies, and in two privateering ventures. By 1654, when the Wharfage Books begin, he was already trading at a high level. But then his family and faith began to work against him and the decade to 1664 saw a decline in his trade which is all the more dramatic against the buoyant upward trend of Bristol trade generally (Figure 2).

3.1.2 1654–1665: decline 24

By 1654 the Speeds had their own four children: Metredone, a boy, in 1649; Theodore in 1651; Mehitabel in 1652; and Jahzeel, a boy, in 1653. Meanwhile, between 1652 and 1662 all the eight step-children married or reached their majority. Each would have received the portion set aside for these events. Finally around in 1663 his wife Ann herself died, so that the last of the Yeamans property, including the New Inn where the family had lived, passed from his hands, in terms of the pre-nuptial settlement. All this would have been in itself a considerable drain on his working capital, entailing a corresponding rundown in trade. But Speed had also to cope with the consequences of becoming a Quaker.

²³ The Declaration of the Mayor etc (Bristol 1642) 1

²⁴ For this section, see Harlow 'Thomas Speed' I.3.

²⁵ Metredone (Speed's and Jahzeel's spelling in the Ledger), or Metradone, is just possibly after Metraton, an Archangel in the Talmudic tradition. Jahzeel is after the third son of Hebron, Chronicles I. 23.19.

Introduction xvii

The Quakers came to Bristol in the second half of 1654.²⁶ Speed was 'convinced' in the latter half of 1655. He was not alone. His brother John and many of the Yeamans also became Quakers (see Appendix A Marriage 1). The early Quaker leaders Bishop, Hollister, Pyott and Rowe were all his kinsmen and he joined this leadership group. But Speed remained the merchant, and his main contribution in these early years was helping to mind the business of the more active evangelists and publicists, such as Edward Pyott and George Bishop.

In the 1660s, Quakers broke the new Restoration laws by attending their own meetings, absenting themselves from regular parish meetings and refusing to take any oath when up before the magistrates on such charges. Speed was frequently arrested both in Bristol and in Reading He thus exposed himself to sentences of outlawry, banishment and the forfeiture of estate. What with harassment, imprisonment and anxiety on this score and the loss of Yeamans' capital, it is not surprising that by 1665 Speed's trade had fallen to its lowest point.

3.1.3 1665–1675: recovery ²⁷

But in 1655 Speed married again, the Quaker Martha Smith, an heiress to modest property (Appendix A Marriage 2).²⁸ Perhaps with this financial assistance and certainly with loans from friends, he got himself a substantial new house, backing on the Gild Hall and with cellars under it, in Small Street, which appears in the Ledger as 'House in which I live'.²⁹ He also began again to attend Hall at the Society of Merchant Adventurers, after a decade of absence. At the same time, he began to distance himself from the main body of Quakerism. He may well have shared the uneasiness of other first generation Friends, as the movement which had rejected all authority but the Inner Light submitted itself to the control of Fox, of London Meeting, and of Elders, and imposed its disciplines upon the freedom of members to preach, prophesy and publish – and to marry.

Marriage was the stumbling block for Speed. His second wife had died soon after giving birth to their only child, Martha. Soon Speed sought a third, Ann Sherman (Appendix A Marriage 3). But she was not a Friend, and the approval of the Bristol Meeting was so grudging as to amount to condemnation. From then on, Speed was no longer to be found among the leaders of the Bristol Quakers, and even seems to have ceased attending the fortnightly meetings for business. In successive bouts of persecution, including the most terrible of all in 1683–5, he was never again arrested; and the implication is that he was one of the Bristol Friends who 'came not to meetings and so escaped a prison'. Loans to the City, to Romsey the Town Clerk, even to John Hellier, the scourge of dissenters, may help to explain his immunity (ff. 30.4, 16.6, 101.4). Yet he attended meetings for worship on occasion at least, and he was still sometimes consulted. He was aloof, but not apostate.

His withdrawal from active Quakerism probably left more time for his business. His third wife, like his second, may have brought some modest extra capital, though all that can be traced was a third share in a little property. Possibly he gained some business when his brother John Speed and his brother-in-law William Yeamans died – both had been trading on a greater scale than he had – or, more likely, he had acted for their families in bringing in goods consigned to them. Speed's trade rose to new heights and by the middle of the 1670s, he was clearing some 6% of all the wine imported into Bristol. It is not surprising to see his name on the SMV committee of 1676 which negotiated for the purchase of Clifton – their largest investment for the century.

3.1.4 1676–1681 Succession and semi-retirement³¹

But by this time Speed himself was in his mid fifties. It was time to consider curtailing his activity before nature forced the issue. He had three sons, all by his first marriage. The eldest, Metredone, had been a lad of great promise, sanding chemical communications to the Royal Society in his teens. He had been apprenticed to his father in 1664, but he never took his freedom and there is no mention of him in any public records after 1670. The Ledger has an account for the 'Estate of Metredone Speed' which was solemnly carried forward in 1690 (f. 22.1). In 1670 the Wharfage Books show that three shipments entered Bristol in the name of the second son Theodore. It looks as though, on the death of Metredone, Theodore was hastily drafted in to fill the succession gap. But after 1670, nothing more is heard of him either. That left just Jahzeel, the youngest. He had been apprenticed to Speed at the end of 1668, and reached his majority in 1674 but he did not marry – which usually came within a year or so of majority and freedom – and no shipments came to Bristol in his name for some time. At last, in 1678, Jahzeel was brought forward as heir presumptive, and introduced to the SMV.

The other branch of Speed's exit strategy was the building up of a country estate. In 1678 Speed had bought what he called a farm (f. 76 3D) at Clapton for perhaps £150, and later, possibly in 1680, he had purchased a much larger parcel of more or less adjoining land from the Gorges ff. 7.1, 151.1).³² He put in hand the building of a house there, completed in January 1683 with a final payment of £280 (f.31.3). The exact location has not been identified but it was somewhere between Clapton-in-Gordano and the southern extension of modern Portishead, about 8 miles west of Bristol.

All this entered the Ledger in December 1681 as 'Estate at Clapton' valued at £1102 (f. 38.4). At this time, he had much of the land in his own hands and was dealing in livestock, in fodder, and in dairy produce (ff. 4.5, 5.5, 5.6, 32.3, 38.3). In 1684, Speed owned two fowling pieces, such as were common for country dwellers but much less so in the city. It seems to be a fair inference that he contemplated life not so much as a country gentleman, but as what would later be termed a gentleman farmer.

By the end of 1681 when the Ledger opens, Jahzeel was keeping the Ledger, while all the imports in the first half of the 1680's were in Jahzeel's name. Speed had retired.

3.2 1681–1690: the Ledger story³³

3.2.1 Fourth Marriage

But Speed's third wife Ann had died some time in 1680/81. Speed was again a widower, with his unmarried daughter Martha keeping house for him and for Jahzeel still unmarried. Perhaps this was why Speed spent much of 1682 staying with his favourite households, the Hemings in London and the Curtises in Reading. And in Reading, at the end of 1682, he married his fourth wife. Mary Lamboll was the daughter of George Lamboll, a very ancient Reading Friend: all the family seem to have been staunch Quakers. She had not been married before, probably because she had been looking after her father who had died only recently. She had then inherited some Reading leasehold property, charged with an annual maintenance for her mother Sarah, and no cash. Altogether then it was an entirely suitable, if not a glittering, match.

This marriage gave Speed the opportunity to show his contempt for the new Quaker marriage procedures which were now standard almost everywhere. But Reading Meeting was under the leadership of the Curtises, leaders of opposition to the Foxite innovations promulgated by London Meeting. The orthodox, who in Reading constituted the minority, recorded their conviction that Speed and Curtises went out of their way 'to lay waste orderly proceedings'.

3.2.2 Jahzeel!

It seems likely that all this, the absences, the courtship, and perhaps the involvement in Quaker dissident politics, distracted Speed from such oversight as he may have intended to maintain over Jahzeel's conduct of the trading business.

Having installed his new wife in the country house, Speed took a proper look at the books. What he found could not have been to his liking, and sometime between March and June 1683, Speed re-assumed responsibility for keeping the Ledger.³⁴ One of the first accounts he opened was devoted to Jahzeel (f. 69.2).³⁵ The debit entries which follow make an eloquent chronicle of wrong-doing, beginning with over £400 'money owing for which he credited himself but unduly under the title of Sir Jahzeel Speed' which Jahzeel in a positive flourish of impudence had opened and debited 'To Ballances Incognito' (f. 33.4, see frontispiece).

There were other entries for smaller sums lifted from Cash without record and several quite substantial outstanding scores for drink. But worst of all was the repeated pocketing of money received without crediting the accounts of the payers, and in one instance cash taken by Jahzeel was debited to another trader. Of course these misdoings would come to light when accounts were agreed or when debtors were asked for money they had already paid. The amounts were not huge but that was immaterial. The word would go around that Jahzeel could not be trusted. No merchant could succeed without trust, the personal credit on which his financial credit-rating depended. So Speed angrily wrote off the money long since spent on sending Jahzeel to lodge and learn with his factor in Spain, and took the management of the business back into his own hands. At the same time, he abandoned his farming activity, sold his agricultural stock and let out his land. But he kept the house he had built there, fenced the orchard and planted trees, making of it what would soon be thought of as a villa.

³⁴ Ledger entries dating from March are in his hand, but it is clear that the Ledger was posted in arrears, see 4.2.4 below.

³⁵ The keeping of this Jahzeel account, with items from the long past such as the cost of sending Jahzeel to Spain, served no formal accounting purpose, and Speed cannot have expected that Jahzeel would ever repay them – yet he even carried the account forward when Jahzeel was dead (f. 178.3). It was Speed's characteristic way of expressing displeasure, as the open account for Metredone's estate expressed his grief.

Speed may still have nourished hopes of him. For some time, Jahzeel remained in the house, still apparently able to get at the petty cash box (f. 60.2). Consignments continued to be entered in his name until 1686. In 1686/7 Jahzeel (who was never a Quaker) was senior Churchwarden for St Werburgh's. No Churchwardens' accounts were rendered that year; and it was left to Speed make up a deficit of the poor money which Jahzeel had received.³⁶

In 1687 Speed sent Jahzeel off to stay with his cousin John Warren in Devon. In 1688, he was removed to the care of his step-sister Elizabeth Milner, now a widow. By 1689 the entries for his diet and for pocket money and new clothes were interspersed with those for physic and doctors' fees, and in 1690 he was sent to Bath. In March 1690, the Clerk of the Society of Merchant Venturers marked him 'sick' and at the next Hall on June 21st 'died since the last Hall'.

Jahzeel was an interesting character, obviously plausible but easy-going, and no more concerned to take trouble in concealing his peculations than in his conduct of the business. For it is also clear that under him, the management had been slack, and Speed quickly showed a healthier profit on a reduced sales volume. But his aim now was not to rebuild a business, but, in the absence of a successor, to run it down. Over the decade some $\pounds 2,500$ was diverted from the business into financial assets and rented properties.

3.2.3 Martha's marriage

In June 1687, Martha Speed married Thomas Goldney Junior. This marriage was eminently suitable and properly conducted 'in the way & manner of Friends'.³⁷ But there are indications that Speed never rated young Goldney very highly. A major dissatisfaction was the promised settlement on the bride, still outstanding when Speed made his will. In the interim, Speed hung on to the £800 dowry he had promised, though recording it as paid (f. 127.1 May 13). So, whereas Heming was eventually named as his sole executor, Goldney was only one of the trustees of a small bequest to the Quaker poor.

Martha's marriage seems to have brought the fourth Mrs Speed a little more into the foreground. Only after it did Speed buy from his brother-in-law some of the household items from Reading that had meant home to Mary Lamboll, and, next year, pay for redecorating at Small Street and Russian leather chairs (ff. 131.1 D Oct 31, 153.1 D Sept 29, Oct 16). It seems possible that for the first few years, Mary Speed had kept the house in the country, while Martha continued to manage the Bristol house.

3.2.4 A mysterious affair

Though the Ledger reveals so much of personal life, it betrays no hint of the stormy politics of the decade: the royalist backlash after the Exclusion crisis in which Bristol Quakers suffered their worst persecution, Monmouth's rebellion, the succession of James II, the Glorious Revolution. But there is one very mysterious transaction concerning Henry Gibbs and his soap.

Henry Gibbs was a man whom Speed frequently dealt with and not infrequently lent to. In June 1682, an account was opened for 79 chests of soap deposited by Henry Gibbs (f. 51.5). Gibbs received an advance of £200, the soap was apparently sold and the proceeds, less advance, interest and commission, were paid him.

On f. 53 four merchants are debited with purchasing the soap, each entry circumstantially detailed by weight and price per hundredweight. This is the first entry for each account, and it looks as though all four were opened together and for the purpose of entering these sales, all being headed 1682. For two of them, these are the only entries, and two have further purchases in 1685 and 1689. No actual date is given for the purchases. Up to this point, all the entries are made by Jahzeel.

But the accounts remained apparently unsettled until four years later when the full amount payable is credited to each one of them with the mysterious formula 'By Proffit and Losse for the Soape per Contra received by/of a friend' in Speed's hand (but the emphasis is mine). The combined counter entry in Profit & Loss, in August 1686 and again in Speed's hand, sheds no more light on the matter: 'for 79 Chests of Soape sould [names] as may appeare recd per a friend' (f. 127.1D).

Crediting the amounts to P&L meant that they were written off. And there is no entry anywhere in the entire Ledger to indicate that any other person had in fact either paid Speed for these purchases or was owing for them. If any payment had been made, why conceal it? If not, why write off the amount rather than pressing the buyers for it? And if it was to be written off, why in such misleading terms? If, for example, Jahzeel had received and pocketed the amount, the fact would have been debited reproachfully to Jahzeel's account.

Henry Gibbs was a slightly suspicious character. He was on the 1684 list of Dangerous and Disaffected Persons to be searched for arms – as was Speed himself.³⁸ More significantly, Gibbs was at Lyme Regis in June 1685, just when it was made the beachhead for Monmouth's rebellion. On the 27th June, the magistrates in Bristol Quarter Sessions registered a certificate from the Mayor and four citizens of Lyme to say that Gibbs had stayed in his mother-in-law's house all the time, had no dealings with the rebels and behaved himself like a loyal subject throughout. But if, in the uneasy days after Sedgemoor, Speed entertained suspicions about Gibbs himself, they must have been soon allayed, for Speed continued to do business with him – and never reversed or disguised the entries to Gibbs's account. And it would seem that Gibbs really got the money, including £100 via Heming, Speed's London banker. So any falsification here would extend to Heming's account as well as Gibbs'.

There is little of apparent interest about the four alleged buyers of the soap: Francis Whitchurch, William Burges, Charles Herbert and Thomas Rich. Whitchurch was the most important: he would be elected to the Council in 1695 and became in turn Mayor and Alderman. He was a sugar-boiler and appears elsewhere in the Ledger as an associate of Herbert. Burges, also described in the ledger as grocer, appears nowhere else in the ledger or civic lists, but is very likely the one listed as a £600 man, the top rate in the Family Tax of 1696. Rich is not otherwise identifiable. None of them seems to have been a Quaker, and for what it is worth, none of them is among the Dangerous and Disaffected Persons in 1684.

However, Whitchurch and Burges bought some rice from Speed in April 1685, and the debits for these purchases come immediately after the mysterious soap purchases. Their bills were promptly settled in cash. Perhaps Speed then reminded them of the apparently long-outstanding account soap account, and had to accept their protestations of ignorance.

So, a conjectured reconstruction. In 1682, Jahzeel made some misleading entries about a transaction with Gibbs. In 1685 Speed became aware of this and suspected that the affair touched on the treasonable – it was the time of that earlier Monmouth conspiracy, the Rye House plot.³⁹ In some alarm, Speed wrote off the debts, throwing in the reference to 'a friend' in the (mistaken) belief that this would allay rather than arouse suspicion.

This reconstruction leaves many questions unanswered. Even if it is correct, it does not follow that Jahzeel, or any one, had actually been involved in treason. But it does provide a link from the apparently insulated world of the trader and his household to the frightening world of politics, where suspicion or prejudice or expediency could hang a man as surely as real guilt.

3.3 Speed's last years 1690–1703⁴⁰

By 1690, when the ledger closes, Speed's trading had virtually ceased. He cleared no imports in 1691 or 1692, some consignments on behalf of his Spanish factor Samuel Kekewich in 1693 and four consignments in 1694: sugar, tobacco, ginger and oil – significantly no wine – perhaps in final settlement of outstanding balances with overseas associates.

He continued to expand and consolidate his Clevedon estate. He also purchased property in the Bristol Castle precinct and in Reading (buying old Lamboll holdings, perhaps to please his wife). Finally, in the 1700s, he acquired and then added to a considerable property in Olveston, south Gloucestershire. At his death in 1703, he left nearly £10,000 worth of real estate in town and country, to be divided, subject to an annuity for his widow, between the families of his only surviving children, the Hemings and the Goldneys.

4 ACCOUNTING

4.1 The Ledger in seventeenth-century accounting

4.1.1 Accounting Records 41

The Ledger was an official record, producible in the civil courts as evidence of debt or discharge. It was kept by the merchant himself, or by a book-keeper acting under his direct instruction rather than by rote.

⁴⁰ See Harlow 'Thomas Speed' I. 7.4, 7.5, 7.6.

⁴¹ See Roseveare Markets & Merchants; J. Price 'Directions for the Conduct of a Merchants Counting House, 1766' Business History 28 91986) 134–150; Yamey 'Some 17th & 18th century double-entry ledgers' and other articles.

Introduction xxiii

The Ledger stood at the apex of a pyramid of accounting records. At the base were the papers which actually constituted transactions: orders (mostly in letter form), invoices and bills, receipts, notes of hand, bills, bonds, bills of lading, customs entry etc. In a well-kept office these would be filed or bound by date and type or purpose for ready location. Thus Speed referred to 'my bundle of Accts' (f. 87.5). Then there would be books of temporary record, in which the essentials of each sort of transaction would be entered more or less as they occurred. Speed refers to his Wastebook (memoranda), and books of Receipts, of Charges on Merchandises and of Petty Disbursements. From these papers and books of first entry were compiled such secondary records as the merchant found convenient. Of this kind probably are Speed's books of Accounts and of Invoices and Cashbooks, all of which as mentioned in the Ledger had numbered folios.

The key secondary record was, or should have been, the Journal in which each transaction was formally recorded in its dual aspect: account to be debited and account to be credited, the double entries from which the Ledger would be made up. Indeed the Journal and the Ledger are effectively two arrangements of the same data: the first by date and the second by the accounts to be charged. The Journal would have the more detailed narrative, and Speed's Ledger twice refers to the 'particulars' to be found there. But although he did summarise for the Ledger, it was mostly at a very petty level: he was capable of entering into the Ledger a payment for 'porteridge' separately from the tip to the porter. And it seems clear that many entries were posted direct from temporary records into the Ledger without ever passing through the Journal

Today, the final outcomes of a firm's accounting system are the Balance Sheet and the Profit & Loss statement. The Balance Sheet shows all the firm's assets and its liabilities at the beginning and at the end of the trading period. The P&L statement shows the net profit arising from trading over the same period, any extraordinary gains or losses, the interest and tax paid, and how much of the eventual surplus, if any, has been paid out to the owners. To produce these summary statements in a reliable and consistent way requires some principles to be applied. For example, capital transactions should be distinguished from revenue and expenditure flows, and these flows in turn separated from investments or withdrawals by the owners; stocks must be costed; and all transactions should be consistently attributed to the period in which they took place.

Early modern treatises on accounting were well aware of the use of periodic Balance Sheets and Income statements.⁴³ But these were much more relevant for the enterprise with several partners or shareholders than for the sole trader or the family firm. In practice, few firms adhered to the full requirements of formal book-keeping and there was a wide variety of actual practice. Speed maintained a formal accounting system, but in a fashion which would not have permitted any useful summary of trading profit or of changes in net worth over a year or any other period.

 $^{^{42}}$ Compare the Marescoes who apparently transferred totals of £2000 or more at a time from the petty cash book: Roseveare Markets & Merchandise 13.

⁴³ eg T. Browne The Infallible, most Accurate, and most Concise Method of Merchants Accompts London 1680; R. Dafforne The Merchant's Mirror:or Directions for the perfect Ordering and Keeping of his Accounts London 1684; R. Handson Analysis or resolution of merchants accompts London 1669; S. Monteage Debtor and creditor made easie, or, A short instruction for the attaining the right use of accounts after the best method used by merchants London 1682; J Vernon The Compleat Comptinghouse London 1678.

First, Speed did not distinguish between capital and revenue. He kept no financial stock accounts for his merchandise. For any parcel or consignment, there was one account to which costs were debited and revenues credited, so that the balance at any time showed you how much of the cost had been recovered, but not how much of the original stock remained. By the time all the stock had been disposed of, this method would effectively give the same result as modern accountancy (though without attribution to the period in which the results were achieved) but intermediate reckonings would show a balance of the difference between the profit taken and the value of stock remaining. Similarly, Speed kept an account for each property which brought together its original cost, and all subsequent charges and revenues, thus hopelessly confusing capital and income: a property stood at nil in his books as soon as the net rents had covered the initial cost. So, even if he had drawn up a balance sheet at any time, say when the Ledger closed, it would not have represented his net assets.

Secondly, he used his Profit & Loss (P&L) account as a sink: if there was no meaningful account to be debited or credited as required by the double entry system, then the counter entry would be made to P&L. Thus P&L was used to write off the balance when a consignment or project was finished, which would be a profit or loss more or less as understood today, but generally as a single sum at a period much later than that in which it actually arose - more a means of closing accounts no longer active than of reckoning trading profits. P&L was charged with overhead expenses or revenues which could not be attributed to any particular consignment. It was used for household and personal expenditure, effectively the amounts withdrawn from the business, though it is sometimes not easy to tell whether a particular payment was for personal or business use. It was used for some very mysterious entries: for example cash payments of £500 and £1200 'to severals' were simply debited to P& L without any explanation or clue as to the payees or the purpose (f. 8D Jan 9, April 10). And Speed used it for what might be called Gesture Accounting, as when he debited Jahzeel with the long-sunk costs of a spell in Spain, and credited P&L; or wrote off the outstanding amounts due from Scrope when he broke with him in 1686. Although the balance of P&L was carried forward when a new folio had to be used, there is no indication that any significance was attached to the figure, and nothing was carried forward when the Ledger was closed.

Finally, Speed did not attempt to close off accounts simultaneously at any set time, so as to allow the drawing up of either a Balance Sheet or a P&L statement, or post them fully to any consistent date. Ongoing accounts were simply carried forward to a new page when there was no space to continue them. Dead accounts, on the other hand, might be left open for years – for example many Debtors brought in as balances when the ledger was opened in 1681 remained in unrequited isolation for nine years before being written off when the Ledger was closed.

Similarly, he might leave arrears of rent on property unrecorded for years before suddenly raising a single charge for the whole amount. In the end, he simply closed off the Ledger when he was running out of folios, and although several long dead

⁴⁴ Broadly, the proper method today would be to credit the Stock Account with the cost of the goods sold, debiting this to a Sales Account, from which the Gross Profit could be computed, and leaving a balance of Stock at cost among the assets. There is just one occasion on which Speed might have attempted this: the balance of the last wine account – on the badly disfigured f. 186 – is partly written off to Profit & Loss and partly carried forward to the next ledger. The first might represent the profit made on the wine sold and the second an estimate of the value of stock remaining.

Introduction xxv

accounts were closed off then, there was no particular date to which those carried forward had been posted.

4.1.2 The function of the Ledger

In all this, Speed was following the common practice of his time. Hardly any sole traders kept their books in such a way as to identify the profit made in a period of time or the net assets employed in making it. It follows that their accounts could not have fulfilled that function ascribed to them by some sociologists, as instruments in the rationalistic pursuit of maximum returns on capital.

This does not mean that Speed was not concerned to make a profit. But it demonstrates that the concept of 'profit maximisation' was not applicable: the 'bottom line' cannot have dictated decision-making when there was no bottom line.

It was not that Speed was moving about in a cloud of uncertainty which would have been dispelled by more rigorous accounting methods. A man thoroughly familiar with a business largely composed of discrete transactions rather than continuous processes would not find his books, however well-kept, told him anything he needed to know in order to make decisions.

What then was the requirement which Speed's Ledger served? It was above all to keep track of his dealings with others. As Muldrew writes,⁴⁵ manuals [of accounting] stressed that their value to merchants and tradesmen was not to calculate profit or gain, but to be used as a rational orderly means of keeping track of the accountant's obligations.

A credit-worthy man must not only keep, but be known to keep, a scrupulous record of his dealings. Commercial justice had not only to be done, but be seen to be done.

4.2 Speed's Accounting Practice

Thus it may be taken that the Ledger is accurate in accounts for named persons, and that adjustments are explicitly declared. That does not however mean that all interpersonal dealing were entered there. There are several cash payments to people, and sometimes for scores or hundreds of pounds, which are referenced merely to P&L. Personal accounts were only for those dealings which both parties regarded as creating future claims or extinguishing old ones.

Accounts for consignments handled on commission had also to be full and accurate. While such pure agency business was marginal for Speed, he was often in the habit of taking a share in a large consignment which he handled as a whole, charging the other partners with their share of the costs so that he had to be, and was, meticulous in keeping these accounts. With consignments on his own account there was less need to be exact; and here Speed might casually charge incidental costs to P&L rather than to the consignment concerned.

When it came to accounts which affected no-one else, Speed's book-keeping was far from exact. At the extreme, an entry would be made in one account with a proper reference to the folio where the matching counter-entry should be found – but it is not! There are one hundred and twenty such 'only twins'. Some of these are related to corrections, which have been made in the important account and simply not carried through to Speed's own. Then there are also over 150 double-entries where the amount credited does not agree with the amount debited. These are very often clearly a matter of time saving: for example, a customer is given a discount or abatement, which is correctly shown on the customer's account, but the counter entry simply shows the nominal sales value.

4.2.1 A Case Study in Cutting Corners

An account for 30 butts of sherry was opened in January 1682 (f. 45.5). The sherry was purchased in Spain by Speed's partners and colleagues John Cook & Samuel Kekewich; and shared 50/50 between himself and John Cook & Co. The consignment was fully declared – Speed paid wharfage on exactly this consignment on January 5^{th} $1682.^{46}$

The wine seems to have gone off rather: the price of a Butt was lowered rapidly in only a few months, and a good deal was sold as 'corrupt' for little or nothing – three or four butts worth may have been simply poured away. Speed might well have considered that the disappointing sales were due to poor selection or cooperage at the other end, but the account scrupulously ensures that each partner gets exactly 50% of the costs, including rebates, and receives exactly 50% of the proceeds – even down to the money received for selling empty butts and iron hoops (left after throwing away wine?) to a local cooper. Cooke drew a bill on Speed for the exact amount in favour of a third merchant, which Speed met in cash.

Speed's keeping of the joint account is meticulous. But his account for his own share is a different matter (f. 45.4). It is debited, correctly, with his half of the prime costs, i.e. those sustained in Spain when the wine was purchased and despatched. It ought to have been credited with his half of the net proceeds, and as this was the lesser sum, an adverse balance of nearly £30 should have been debited to P&L. Speed saves himself an extra entry by simply entering the net proceeds as exactly the same as the prime costs, so that the account can be closed off without any posting to P&L. There can be little question of a mistake – the two accounts are on the same folio.

No less than four items debited to the joint account for Speed's own charges should also have been credited to Profit & Loss (f. 9), but are nowhere to be found there. What there is in this P&L account is an only-twin debit entry for £3.00 in respect of one hogshead of corrupt wine from this very consignment. There is no matching entry to credit either the joint consignment or Speed's share of it with this sum, and all the credits which are shown have their own properly matching counter-entry. But the main account does show a credit for £3 for a hogshead of corrupt wine sold to a merchant who did indeed pay for it – it was one of the payments received but concealed by the egregious Jahzeel. Perhaps before learning this, Speed debited the value of this item to P& L, then later entered it correctly and in full. Although he knew how such an error should properly be corrected, he knew that the entries which stood in the joint account for the wine were correct and complete, and did not take the trouble of correcting his own.⁴⁷

⁴⁶ BRO SMV/7/1/1/9

⁴⁷ Crossing out is not a recommended book-keeping practice, especially if the ledger is to have evidential weight in the courts. Speed should have completed the first entry by crediting the £3.00 from P& L to the wine, then reversed both entries, debiting the wine and crediting P& L £3, with a narrative explaining the error, as he did for a different error in the joint account.

Introduction xxvii

Thus the account for the joint consignment can be copied to John Cooke without a blush on the score of honesty or accountancy. But four debits in it were never actually credited to P& L; one debit was matched by a much larger credit which saved another P& L entry; and one P& L debit was neither credited to the Wine account nor reversed. As a result his P& L account lacks £29 6s 5d which should have been debited to it and £23 11s which should have been credited.

His account with Joseph Badger (f. 50.4 with n. 60) involves similar short cuts.

4.2.2 The Cash Account

The Cash account was treated with no more care than the P& L. There are frequent arithmetical mistakes in making compound entries, where two or more payments to or from different persons are lumped together in the Cash account. In one case, a single payment of £100 (as shown in the debtor account) is credited twice to Cash – within three lines of the same folio (f. 139.1 October 22, 24).

Nor was Speed's balancing of the Cash account accurate. A blatant instance was the entry showing a payment to Thomas Goldney of £800 marriage portion – which was ignored in the subtotal only a few lines below (f. 121.1C May) This may have been a deliberate error: I suppose that the payment was not made but rather put aside against the time when the Goldneys should actually fulfill their part of the marriage agreement. Nevertheless Speed's Cash balances for the next three years include £800 which has also been shown as having been paid to Goldney. Elsewhere it was probably a mere arithmetical error which cast the total Credits as exactly £100 too small (f. 68.1). Other errors were less substantial but persistent. Of the twenty-five folios for the Cash account, only nine correctly calculate the balance to be carried forward. Clearly the Ledger Cash account can have played no part as a control on the cash actually to be found on the premises, though he did keep control, via the Cash Book; as his identifying of cash lifted by Jahzeel shows.

4.2.3 Dating

Errors or shortcuts like these would have ensured that trial balances did not balance, and so provide further evidence that none was ever taken. They are not however many or significant in relation to the whole corpus of the Ledger. The most prevalent carelessness was not entering the date of the transactions, which affects some half of the entries. Even where a date is given, it is not always clear that it is the date of the transaction, and not just the date of the entry. And accounts rendered by Heming his London banker or Kekewich his main Spanish factor were simply entered up when they were received without any attempt to date them individually.

4.2.4 Posting the Ledger

The Ledger was a tertiary record and obviously made up in arrears. This should have been done regularly, daily or weekly, and from a properly kept Journal so that matching debits and credits would always be posted. The errors noted above where counter-entries are either missing or differ in amount indicate that this was not done.

The case of John Wasbrow, cooper, is instructive (f. 28.3). Specific debits dated September 1683 had been posted to his account. By March 1684, Wasbrow had died and Speed settled affairs with his widow, entering up some £17 worth of further sales to him and no less than £95 worth of cooperage work done by him, nearly all of which had been recorded only on 'noates' before then. That £95 should have included £9 worth of cooperage properly debited to the sherry account discussed above, but never individually credited to Wasbrow, although cross-referenced to his account. Some £85 worth of work, properly chargeable to specific consignments, was never assigned to them but merely bundled in a lump to P&L.

Thus the picture which emerges is of a piecemeal posting of one account or another in the Ledger from primary records which might have been sitting around for months until it was needful or handy to enter them up, and then perhaps posted only the critical entries in the accounts of other merchants, leaving counter-entries to be posted to P&L or Cash in some tidying-up session later yet. In one case, an entry which should have been dated 17 June (as the cross-entry is) is dated 17 March and brought into the end of an account which was closed in that month, implying that the Cash Account was being posted some three months in arrears (ff. 34.1, 40.1).

Something less than an orderly dealing with accumulated records is indicated also by a mistake in the Stockings account. The same consignment which had already been credited, correctly, to the ship Rebecca, was credited also to the Civilia, although the Civilia had already been credited, also correctly, with a different consignment. The rogue entry is not matched by a debit to the Civilia venture (ff. 106.1, 91.1, 101.1). Such an error could scarcely have occurred if Ledger entries had been posted properly – debit and matching credit – from a properly kept Journal. Instead it suggests rather scrappy records eked out by memory, or at any rate a haphazard method of bringing original records to Ledger. The second, and surely duplicate, credit of £100 to Cash noted above also testifies to a less than thorough posting procedure.

These same irregularities also make it clear that although there was Journal, it was by no means the only route to the Ledger as it should have been.

4.2.5 Why Double Enter?

Why did Speed bother to keep the Cash and the P&L accounts in the Ledger or use double-entry book-keeping at all? Double-entry was almost essential for keeping track when as so often there were transfers of debits or settlements between various parties. Anyhow, the double-entry system was a part of the merchant's art or mystery, and the Cash and P&L accounts were a necessary part of a full double-entry system. To keep them in a careless manner was one thing, as it might be to go out into the street with an unbrushed hat. To omit them was like going hatless altogether, a serious breach of decorum.

5 SPEED'S TRADE

5.1 Imports 1655–1694

For most of his career, the evidence for Speed's trade is the Wharfage paid by him and members of his household. This is shown, plotted against that for Bristol as a whole, in Figure 2 below. Clearly, Speed's trade did not merely mirror Bristol's. This is most striking in the late '50s and early '60s when his plunges down while Bristol's climbs. After that the movements are broadly in the same direction, peaking alike in the mid 70s; but the rates of Speed's rise to this peak and of his fall away from it are much greater than for the port as a whole.

Introduction xxix

Fig. 2 Wharfage paid by Speed and for Bristol as a whole

Another way of looking at these differences is that in the late 50s Speed was paying over 2% of the entire Bristol wharfage, which makes him a major player indeed. Even when his trade regained the same absolute heights in the mid 1670s, it represented only about 1% of the whole.

Some of his associates traded at a much greater rate: Robert Yate for example paying over £4 wharfage every year for ten years; and Speed's brother-in-law William Yeamans at nearly £9 a year for 14 years. This Yeamans is up with the really great traders whose names appear on almost every page of the Wharfage books – Bullock, Bowen, Deane, and Jackson in the earlier part of the period; Crump, Davis, Dudleston, Clarke later and Elton later still; while the Popes, Michael, Richard and Charles, seem always to have been amongst the merchant magnates. Speed was not quite in this class for volume, and clearly in the 1680s he was a minor figure, sinking to insignificance at around 0.1% of Bristol's trade.

These wharfage records also detail the nature of each consignment. These fall mostly into five categories: Wine, Oil, Dried Fruit, Sugar and Tobacco, and thus allow a broad estimate of wholesale value as shown in Figure 3 below. Of course, apart from being an estimate, it does not necessarily indicate the values realised by Speed as an unknown proportion may have been brought in on commission on behalf of others. In the 1680s the proportion was over 40% but that was not necessarily typical.

⁴⁸ I have not attempted to record entries for these merchants, but the impression left by the frequency of occurrence is overwhelming

Fig. 3 Estimated Value of Speed's Imports

In fact, perhaps no decade is typical, and this is brought out by the proportions (by estimated value) of his trade as shown in Figure 4 below.

Table 2 Atlantic and Southern Europe: earlier and later periods

If there is any broad trend is that in the first half of his career, Speed dealt mainly with the Americas, and in the second with Southern Europe, and especially in wine.

The two trades were in some ways different.⁵⁰ The American planters needed manufactured goods, and they could pay in little else than return cargoes of sugar or tobacco. The English merchants had a protected monopoly in selling to and in buying from them. There were no problems with foreign languages, customs, or officials; the correspondents belonged to the same culture of values and expectations and there were often kinship links to work through.

It was not difficult to buy or sell sugar and tobacco. They were commodities, categorised by origin and process, but the variations were not subtle or difficult to master. It could be and often was left to the ship's master, who had delivered the English exports or the African slaves, to fill his vessel with suitable return cargoes. With competent packing they would stand transportation and keep well. Sales likewise were not a problem: surpluses on the English market could be re-exported and there was always a buyer somewhere.

But the margins on the colonial products were not good. The supply was constantly increasing; and while English traders had protected access to the English colonies, their products had to compete in London as well as in Europe. More sugar came from Brazil than from all the English sugar islands together; and tobacco grew well enough in Europe itself. Freight and duties amounted to a higher proportion of the gross margin and so increases in them were more damaging. On 22 consignments of sugar in the 1680s, mostly from Nevis, Speed made a loss of some 2% on sales. There are no complete tobacco accounts in the Ledger, an indication that Speed was not much interested in the product. ⁵¹

Moreover there was the long sea voyage. This increased the exposure to storms and piracy, and the costs of insurance and freight. It also increased the length of time over which the return could be made.

⁵¹ There are seven accounts, but five open with balances from the previous Ledger, and the other two (for a total of just 6 hogsheads) were in partnership with Edward Martindale.

In southern Europe on the other hand, the English merchant had no monopoly in buying or selling. He had to deal with foreigners, directly if he used a foreign correspondent or indirectly through a resident Englishman as Speed did with Andrew Stuckey in Bordeaux and Cooke & Kekewich in Cadiz. Apart from differences in law, language and culture, neither personal attitudes nor official policies were likely to favour the outsider; and the kinship links were few and far-stretched.

Products like wine, Speed's speciality, had a much wider range of quality than sugar, and the buying took more expertise. With the best cooperage it might still travel poorly and keep badly. One whole consignment was written off entirely on arrival; and one, with an ominous charge for 63 weeks cellarage made a loss (ff. 142.2, 45.5). Of some 200–250 butts which passed through his cellars – it is difficult to be sure exactly how many – about one in ten may never have been sold for drinking. Blending or 'amendment' might be advisable.

But wine, properly handled, offered much better margins than plantation commodities, especially if disposed of among regular customers who trusted their supplier. The higher margins offered more of a buffer to variations in on-cost. Speed realised over 17% on wine sales in the 1680s. But the proper handling was important. Raisins provide a counter-example. Speed in the '80s had no regular supplier or agent of his own and no well-developed distribution channels. Of the five consignments he handled, three were from different shippers and he simply took a share in the other two, which had been organised by Thomas Strode. He made but $2\frac{1}{2}$ % on costs overall. Even so, it was better to make 2% two or three times a year, as was possible in trading to Spain, than once on the Atlantic run.

Putting all these factors together, the colonial products were not difficult to deal in, but they offered thin margins. To get rich on sugar or tobacco demanded large scale dealings, and exposure to whole-market risks which might mean a loss on a whole year's trading. In the European trade, well-chosen and well-handled consignments could give a better return for less investment, and with risks better spread between them.

No-one was obliged to choose either at the expense of the other. But the comparison suggests that the ease of entry into the Atlantic trade may have recommended it especially to beginners, and the scale required made it more suitable for those ready to take risks. Speed's brother John concentrated almost entirely on sugar and tobacco, and from the moment of his setting up on his own was ready to take on larger consignments than Thomas. Stepson-in-law Edward Martindale also operated mainly across the Atlantic, and in larger volume. In Speed's case there was a discernible tendency to major in Atlantic products in building or rebuilding trade and then to concentrate more and more on the Southern trade that rewarded judgement and care rather than energy and optimism.

In fact, Speed was a general trader in the first half of his career; while in the second half he might have been justly described as a wine merchant who was prepared to handle other goods. In fact over the period of the ledger his main business was stereotypically traditional: exporting textiles to import wine. Accordingly, the next sections of this Introduction focus on these two elements of his trading.

5.2 Wines

5.2.1 Wine Accounts

Speed mainly imported sherry ('Xeries') from Spain. It was usually bought by Cooke & Kekewich, later Kekewich alone, factors in Cadiz, some for Speed and some on their own behalf with Speed as Bristol agent for them. In Bristol he did much in association with Simon Clements, Jonathan Blackwell, and Thomas Day. Clements was a relative and a Quaker, but the other two were neither. These men formed a sort of loose alliance, often bringing in wines together and then adjusting their allocations by sales among themselves. Speed would charge his commission on imports for an absent partner, e.g. Cooke & Kekewich, or even Clement sending a consignment from Spain; but not to other partners in Bristol, even when he seemed to be doing most of the work.

It is often difficult to sort out exactly what happened. The account heading itself can be misleading. Take for example 'Xeries Wine my 2/3 of 30 Butts in partnership with Simon Clement', suggesting 20 butts (f. 94.1). But in fact he sold three back to Clement, then bought six from him and then added two bought of another merchant to the same stock. The accountancy is further complicated by the rather summary treatment of the transactions between the associates, presumably mere extracts from fuller and clearer statements which they must have rendered each other. So it is not always even clear from the Ledger how much of any joint stock Speed was actually responsible for selling and how much went straight to the cellars of a partner.

This, as it were, fluidity in the accounting for wine on paper may have extended to physical stock control. One imagines a cellar with the butts of wine of a particular consignment originally standing together as a group with chalk marks on them to facilitate stock taking and stock rotation. But as the equivalent of bin ends were merged into new groups and sales were made by the butt and by the bottle, things must at times have got confused. At one point, Speed explained that two or three consignments were brought to the same account because of 'mixture of one ships wine with another, & theire being sould promiscuously as they lay in the Cellar' – probably occasioned by the unusual quantity of wines on hand at the same time, perhaps some 60 butts (f. 93. 6C). In these circumstances, the historian can hardly expect exactitude or clarity.

5.2.2 Merchandise

Sherry accounts for nearly all the direct imports. But there are also white wines and clarets, often bought in London or in Bristol; and small purchases of wines, such as Rhenish, which seem to have been used to blend with the main stocks, to enhance their flavour or extend their life.

5.2.3 Sales

Most of Speed's sales were wholesale, by the butt or hogshead. But he also sold at retail to personal customers, all named and usually in round dozens of bottles on account: he was a wine merchant, not a jug-and-bottle outlet. A widow once bought 2 bottles for cash – but he knew her name. And young Thomas Goldney occasionally took just a couple of bottles on account – trading on his relationship with Martha perhaps, if irritating her father.

The retail sales were only about 10% of the total. They were of course made at a higher price: typically a butt which sold for £20–£26 wholesale would retail at around 16s per dozen quart bottles, over £33 a butt – if it was all sold. Bottles and panniers were charged separately.

The extra margin was presumably worth the trouble. But one is struck by his regular customer list, which was short but distinguished: the Earl of Bristol, the Ladies Ann and Susan Pawlet, Sir George Strode, Sir John Drake, Dr Hungerford. There were Somerset or Dorset connections of course for most if not all of these; but these were also mostly ex-Royalists or Tories, as well as persons of some rank. There was even a single batch sold to Robert, Earl of Sunderland. Sunderland had married Ann Digby, sister of the Earl of Bristol who was Speed's main customer, and he had perhaps recommended Speed to his brother-in-law.

Was this distinguished clientele just good marketing? There may have been two other considerations. First, Speed may have been something of a snob, ready to put himself out for well-placed clients – see his interest-free loan to a bishop (f. 78.10). Certainly he was happy to enter these personages in his books without any Quakerly derogation from their full rank and title. Might there also have been an insurance aspect? Did he hope that the countenance of such men might help to avert or mitigate the penalties to which he was exposed? He seems to have written off the unpaid bill for wine supplied to the Mayor of Bristol in 1688 without a qualm (f. 155.4).

5.3 Stockings

Throughout the period covered by the ledger Speed maintained an active business in exporting worsted stockings (always spelled 'stockins'). The Ledger is the only source for this business, but it must have been going before the Ledger opened, for there is an opening balance carried forward from Ledger D. Over the period of the ledger, nearly 60,000 pairs went through his books.

The export of stockings was an important part of England's trade to Spain and Portugal. In 1698 for example 1.7 million pairs of stockings were exported from England. If, as in 1668, some 60% of these went to Spain and Portugal, and rather more than half were worsted stockings, then Speed's annual average in the 80s would constitute over 1% of such a trade, putting him among the top few dozen exporters. But nearly all the information on this trade is derived from the London Port Books and other official documents. Thus the close-up of the business afforded by Speed's ledger seems especially valuable.

The business is traced through two sets of accounts: 'Stockins' which deals with purchases and 'Adventures' which deals with export consignments. The two are linked by a misleading invoicing system which needs to be ignored in determining profits.

5.3.1 Purchases

The Stocking accounts were debited with the direct costs of purchasing stockings, noting invariably the number of pairs bought and usually the price per pair. There are also charges for hotpressing (ironing) for inkle (tape, probably to tie up each dozen) and seals (tags, to relate the kind of stocking to the invoiced descriptions). These accounts show that the merchandise was bought virtually continuously through the period: there is never a month and hardly a week without an entry. One cannot imagine Jahzeel or Speed himself being constantly in attendance to check and pay for stockings – there must have been an apprentice detailed to this duty.⁵³

⁵² P. Croft, 'The Rise of the English Stocking Export Trade' Textile History 18 (1987) 3–16: data from pages 7 & 10.

Not a clerk, as the ledger shows no payments of wages to any such person.

Introduction xxxv

Nearly all the supplies came from about a dozen men, bringing in up to 180 pairs at a time.⁵⁴ These would have been manufacturers or 'hosiers' who purchased material, put it out among hand knitters and collected the finished work, paying in effect for labour. Defoe observes that this was the common pattern for spinning in these parts, as indeed it was elsewhere.⁵⁵ Most of these men are known only through their appearance in the Stocking accounts. Six of them had personal accounts in the Ledger, mostly because Speed lent or advanced them money: Richard Day, Thomas Dyer and John Massinger were all of Bristol; John Brady and John Perrie of Pensford; and Henry Britten of Bedminster (ff. 136.4, 100.2, 155.1, 20.7. 117.8, 167.3). The supply came from Somerset rather than Gloucestershire and Defoe notes it a principal industry round Wells.⁵⁶ In the relative absence of water power, knitted worsted stockings was the main if not the sole product of north-western Somerset.⁵⁷

Among the regular suppliers was Thomas Hill, 'porter' who not only sold stockings on his own behalf, but appeared frequently as the intermediary for payments due to other suppliers. It looks as though he was trusted by other hosiers to deliver their consignments and collect their payments on their behalf. The line of communication would have been made even easier in 1687 when his son Abraham became Speed's servant (f. 131).

The prices paid cluster clearly at over 2s 3d and below 2s a pair with very few between. I take these price brackets to represent respectively full hose (above the knee) and half-hose (below the knee). Within these two broad categories, the prices at which stockings were bought vary by gradations of a farthing a pair over a range of several pence. These minor variations are not related to any recorded differences such as colour or pattern, and the basis for them is nowhere explained. I believe they are too fine to relate to any observable differences in the quality of the work. I conjecture that they were based on weight.⁵⁸ This would certainly be a consideration in the mind of the hosier, who had put out so much material to his knitters and expected it to be represented, weight-wise, in what he collected. This would make the reckoning pretty quick and straightforward: for example if a pair weighing 6oz was bought at 3s, then each half ounce per dozen would be worth a farthing per pair. Such an objective system would allow a mere apprentice to buy for Speed, and Hill to sell for other hosiers, without subjective judgments or haggling.

⁵⁴ Apart from one Elizabeth Dyer whose sales seldom reached double figures. She was probably a knitter rather than a dealer, allowed to sell directly to Speed rather than through a hosier as a charitable concession. She cannot be identified as a Quaker or indeed at all.

⁵⁸ I found nothing in the seventeenth-century trade literature on how stockings were priced, but a customer who ordered worsted stockings from Abraham Dent in the next century specified that they should be above 6 oz. per pair: T Willan, Abraham Dent of Kirkby Stephen: an eighteenth-century shopkeeper (New York 1970) 93

5.3.2 Sales

Stockings were exported by the trunk-load, sent by road to London for shipping by Isaac Heming. I have not found the reason for this. There was no legal constraint, and Bristol, along with other outports, did export stockings. ⁵⁹ These exports were invoiced to Kekewich in Cadiz or occasionally other merchants at nominal selling prices: 'Bristol' hose at between 2s 6d and 3s 6d, and 'Wells' at 1s 6d to 2s – presumably full and half hose respectively though I have not found Bath or Wells used elsewhere in this sense. The exported stockings were at times distinguished as Sadd or Fancy, i.e. plain/sober in colour or patterned/colourful, and some are described as Pearls, perhaps a decorative stitching. These sorts do not appear to carry a price premium or discount, but occasionally a parcel is referred to as 'Fine', 'Finest' or 'Best' and charged at a couple of pence more than others

Speed credited the Stocking account with the invoiced value which was debited an Adventure account. Then the actual value eventually realised, usually in Spanish and in English currency, was credited to the Adventure account. The result is that the financial balances as struck on the Stocking accounts bear no relation to the value of the remaining stock but only the extent to which the invoice value of the stockings exported falls short of (or exceeds) the total purchase costs of all stockings bought, whether despatched or not. Correspondingly, the 'profit' shown on the Adventure account shows only how the amount actually realised, in Spain at the current rates of exchange, exceeded or otherwise the arbitrary sterling prices under which Speed invoiced them. Neither account will identify the purchase costs of the stockings actually exported in a consignment. However I have constructed stock accounts for each type of stocking, charging them with purchases at cost and charging out exports (5.2.2) at the average cost of the stock in hand.⁶⁰ I estimate that over the period of the ledger he realised a profit of over £1,600 on sales of over £8000, an average 20%, varying between a loss of nearly 10%; and a profit of over 40% (ff. 161.3, 114.1).

5.4 Other trading

But even though he majored in these two products, Speed also traded in a wide variety of other items. The value of Stockings exported greatly exceeded that of Wine imported and much of the balance was made up of dried fruits and oil from Iberia and southern France. There were also balancing consignments of silver plate – technically illegal as an export from Spain – brought in to London where Heming would dispose of it to goldsmiths. To the plantations he sent the usual sorts of cargo –machinery and equipment, clothing, and provisions. Indeed, the range of his trade was representative of Bristol's as a whole, with the exception of shipbuilding materials and stone from the Baltic. Whether he could have done better by concentrating entirely on his main products is a question he may have considered himself. But he was a prudent man, and there was no trade, however great the demand or the profit, which might not be strangled by war. So the wise merchant kept his options open and in order to do so, his lines of communication. A fair amount of Speed's trade looks as though it may have been undertaken as much for the sake of his associates as for himself.

Introduction xxxvii

5.5 Trading Associates

Four of Speed's main associates in Bristol were John Blackwell, Thomas Day, Henry Gibbs and Thomas Scrope.

John Blackwell, a near neighbour in Small Street, was a wine merchant (though by 1696 he was 'gent' – so probably retired). ⁶¹ His father Jonathan Blackwell was also a vintner but had moved to London and become an Alderman there. John himself was nominated to the Bristol Council by the King in 1687–88, which suggests he was a dissenter, and elected to it in 1689 which almost certainly makes him a Whig. Some half a generation younger than Speed, he died the year before him, but his son was witnessed Speed's will.

Thomas Day lived at a City property in St Nicholas street.⁶² He was described by Speed as a wine cooper but in fact he seems to have been a substantial dealer, and rated at £50 pa in 1696. He never became a Councillor, and is not to be confused with Sir Thomas Day, soapboiler, who became mayor and MP; but there was probably a connection as one of Sir Thomas's sons was an executor to the other Thomas Day. Day died a couple of months after Speed and is not mentioned in his will.

Henry Gibbs has been discussed already in the context of the mysterious soap (3.2.4). He was the son and grandson of Aldermen, but himself achieved that status only for a few months of 1688 – suggesting a dissenter like Blackwell. He was a fairly active member of the Society of Merchant Venturers, though he never held any office above Warden. He dealt in wine and a variety of other goods. He was a frequent associate of Thomas Scrope, but never abandoned by Speed as Scrope was. Entries in the Ledger suggest that he was often short of cash but in a position to assist Speed in the affairs of the Clapton estate. By 1696, resident in the Castle precinct, he seems to have retired.⁶³

These three were mainly associated with Speed's wine trade. Thomas Scrope was on the Atlantic side. He was a son of the old regicide Adrian Scrope, pro-Quaker Commander of the Castle garrison in 1655 when the Quakers established themselves in Bristol and the two men were for a long time very close. Two of Thomas's younger brother had been apprenticed to Speed, and he had been one of Speed's trustees in the purchase of speed's Small Street home in 1666 (and himself lived next door), and in the Sherman marriage settlement in 1668. Speed and Scrope had even shared the cost and use of Whiston's Remembrancer sent down from London by Heming. ⁶⁴ He was also often associated, in money dealings anyway, with Henry Gibbs. But in 1683, Speed mad a complete break with him – see below 6.3.2.

Another frequent Atlantic partner was Speed's stepson-in-law Edward Martindale. (Appendix A Marriage 1). Speed also took on Edward's son Isaac as an apprentice in 1693, though his own trading was well over – but Speed was a freeman and a Merchant Venturer which Edward was not.⁶⁵ Edward was also a Quaker and, unlike Speed, an active member of the Bristol Men's Meeting.

The other important Quaker kinsman was Isaac Heming, Speed's son-in-law (Appendix A Marriage 2), London banker (see 6.1 below), and executor. Heming was a Quaker from Reading where Speed was a frequent visitor. In London Isaac partnered John Barnard, whose son became Sir John and financial advisor to Robert Walpole.

Speed's Spanish factors were John Cooke and Samuel Kekewich at Port St Mary, Cadiz. Cooke returned to London in 1683/4 where he was occasionally involved in financial dealings with Speed. But Kekewich remained the agent both for the sale of stockings and the purchase of wine, oil and fruit. The Kekewiches are a Devon family and Samuel is a common first name, but I have found out nothing of this one. In 1693, when his own trading was done, Speed cleared five consignments of oil, wine and fruit for Samuel Kekewich who was perhaps retiring and repatriating his capital in this form.

In the '50s and the '60s Speed had been associated with fellow Quakers, his brother John, his brother-in-law William Yeamans; but then he was also associated with his brother-in-law the high Tory Robert Cann. His banker was his Quaker son-in-law but none of his principal business associates in Bristol was a Quaker. He certainly did not draw on Quaker networks for his capital. Nor indeed was he an instance of the common contemporary complaint, that Quakers dealt only with each other. Quakers generally do not seem to have figured any more prominently in his business dealings than their presence in the city would warrant, except, possibly, as recipients of small loans.

Overall, it would seem that Speed dealt with those he knew and trusted. Clearly there were ready-made links with kinsfolk and with Quakers but he does not seem to have favoured either beyond their merits as he found them: neither brother-in-law Lamboll nor son-in-law Goldney passed muster. He was in this period more closely associated with men of the dissenting or Whig community; but he was not in principle averse from dealing with Tory Anglicans – nor they with him. In this we may see reflected a city in which politico-religious differences were present and occasionally dominant, but for the most part subordinate to civic identity, connection and commerce.

5.6 Trading Capital

5.6.1 Sources

Speed started with the trading capital, as well as the connections and credit, of the established Yeamans family he married into. There was however a catch – the family capital was on loan only, and had to be returned as the step-children grew up and when his wife died. His second and third marriages all brought some property and may have played a part in relaunching his trade from the low point of the mid '60s, but there was no substantial contribution from these or his fourth marriage. For the period of the ledger, and perhaps from 1667 when he paid off debt incurred in buying his Small Street house, he was financed by the proceeds of his own trading and indeed in a position to reinvest increasingly in property.

5.6.2 Cash and credit 66

Like other merchants, Speed bought and sold almost entirely on credit. To some extent, settlement of these dealings could be reduced by assigning the debts of others and offsetting them against each other. Good examples in the ledger show Thomas Puxton reassigning to Speed a bond on John Williamson who drew on two of his debtors to meet it; and Speed calling on a debtor John Bradway to meet his, Speed's, obligations to Richard Wasbrow and Giles Gough (ff. 22.5, 72.2, 67.1 35.6, 70.3).

⁶⁶ See Harlow 'Thomas Speed' III.6

Introduction xxxix

But credit, in the narrow financial sense and in the wider sense of standing and reputation, ultimately depended on due settlement in ready money.⁶⁷ Speed maintained two liquid funds: the cash he kept at his house, and the money standing to his credit with his London banker.

Isaac Heming, the trusted son-in-law, was his London banker. Apart from banking, Heming acted for him in the negotiation of foreign bills, the export of stockings to Spain, and the disposal of silver plate from Spain, all without charging commission. In effect, these were treated as equivalent to personal errands like the buying of medicines or hams. There were no bank charges, direct or indirect. Bills, whether overseas or inland, were involved in 40% of the deposits into Speed's account, and 60% of the withdrawals from it, but Heming took no premiums, commissions or discounts. But then since Speed's account was always in credit, Heming benefited from a permanent interest-free loan. Speed in turn was content to leave a considerable sum in Heming's hands with no other return than a comprehensive and flexible service.

Although we cannot trust the Cash Accounts in detail, (see 4.2.2 above) if they are substantially correct, Speed might have anything from a few hundreds to over three thousand pounds in cash at home. These sums may seem surprisingly large but they were not out-of-the-way: Grassby has similar instances.⁶⁹ Speed's bank balance might also be as great. Indeed for much of the time, it was several times bigger than those deposits which the banker Edward Backwell regarded as worthy of top interest rates.⁷⁰ And clearly Cash and Bank credit were to a large extent complementary, as Figure 5 demonstrates.

The mix shifted markedly over the period. An initially large Cash balance was quickly converted into a large bank balance which was maintained for some three or four years. Then the mix shifted back slowly to an enormous preponderance of Cash which was maintained over the last three years. Two factors may account for these changes. First, the big bank balances were maintained in the period of more active trading and declined as his trade diminished. Secondly, in the early years, even before the discovery of Jahzeel's peculation, it may have seemed wise to minimise the amount of cash about the house when Speed himself was so often away.

These liquid funds required and received management. Speed had to foresee the calls and ensure that they would be met. This meant determining which amounts, due either way, were to be settled by bill on London and which in cash in Bristol; and this in turn meant negotiation. Then there were accommodations. A person who wanted to remit (or 'return') cash to London would pay it to Speed in Bristol, who would draw an equivalent bill (in effect, a cheque) in the man's favour on Heming who would then honour it in London. To remit funds the other way, the third party would pay cash into Speed's account with Heming in return for a bill drawn on Speed and honoured by him in Bristol. This process was a staple element of the domestic economy. To Sometimes these transactions suited both parties, but often they were favours from men with London bank accounts to men without. My analysis suggests that such transactions made up about 10% of the money paid into the account with Heming (remittance to Bristol) and 40% of the withdrawals from it (the more frequently required remittance to London). Speed did not charge for these services, though others did.

The terms Cash Flow Projection and Cash Flow Management had not been invented then but Speed must have been very familiar with the process. A detailed regression analysis of his quarterly holdings shows that they were increased or reduced very exactly in line with the flows over the succeeding three months – though as prudence would dictate, more weight was given to projected payments than expected receipts.⁷³

But Speed did not employ that easiest of cash-flow management techniques, the delaying of settlement. On the contrary, he was forward with payments. Nor did he press his debtors for settlement (see 6.3.2 below). In fact his Debtors at any time

⁷¹ Kerridge, Trade and banking ch 4 & 5

 $^{^{73}}$ Changes in the Cash balances were as though calculated on 91% of ensuing payments out and 81% of ensuing payments (correlation coefficient r^2 0.87); and for the bank balance, 123% and 91% respectively (r^2 = 0.81) Harlow 'Thomas Speed' III. 6.1.3

exceeded his Creditors 7 or even 20 to 1. That he was nevertheless so much in overall control of his liquid funds, and so successful in avoiding embarrassment, is a tribute to his judgment and careful management.

6 LENDING 74

Speed over this period never had to borrow, other than occasional small amounts of spending money when staying at Reading. The only exception was a mortgage on the Clapton farm held by the seller – a widow (f. 7.1). It was only £150, easily in his power to pay; but the widow presumably reckoned this as good an investment for the purchase money as she could find, and Speed obliged her. But, as a very solvent man, he did himself lend widely.

Speed's lending may be classified by nature or by status. By nature, we may distinguish Trade Debts, Financial Investments and Favours. The status of a debt varied with its documentation and its terms. At the lowest level were loans with no other documentation than the ledger entries. If Speed died, these would probably be unenforceable without the goodwill of the debtor. Next were the debts arising from a contract with a customer or tenant and those supported by a note. These too would be difficult of enforcement if there was no specific time for payment. Next was the bill, which, once accepted, had a date for settlement; and after that the bond which typically provided for a penalty in the event of non-payment on the due date and/or for interest. At the highest level was the secured bond, of which the mortgage was the chief sort.

Nature and status did not go hand in hand. One might think that interest bearing bonds or mortgages must represent financial investments, while trade debts and casual loans would be informally documented and carry no interest. But it was not so simple. If a trade debt or casual loan remained unpaid for too long, it would move up in status, be secured with more formal documentation, and eventually carry interest. This process of loan escalation has been described by Muldrew ⁷⁵ and is well illustrated by Speed's loans to Nathaniel Haggatt and William Spoore, 6.2.1 and 6.2.2 below.

Nevertheless it is fairly easy to classify most of Speed's lending by looking at the origins of each loan. The breakdown between these different types of lending is estimated to be as shown in Table 3 below at three year intervals over the period of the ledger.

6.1 Financial Investments

Any loan of at least £50, secured by an interest bearing bond or mortgage from the outset, and made to someone who was not a relation or regular associate, has been counted as an investment. The greater part were mortgages. Some of these were to countrymen around Bristol, but Heming occasionally fulfilled a customary function of the London banker by finding good investments. All the borrowers on bond were Bristolians. Although the bonds were for smaller amounts they might run for longer than a mortgage: good mortgages could always be re-assigned, which was why they were ideal as a temporary home for funds pending a favourable property opportunity.

6.2 Financial favours

6.2.1 Family

The two main beneficiaries of Speed's lending were cousin Nathanael Haggatt and brother-in-law Jonathan Lamboll. (Appendix A Marriages 1 and 4). Haggatt, a lawyer, owed Speed £34 when the ledger opened – no bond, no interest. It was not repaid, and the next borrowings were on bond. Interest was charged, retrospectively from the date of the loans but not until the loans had run for $4\frac{1}{2}$ years, and further loans were made. At the end of 1687, the total, of £320, was secured by a mortgage at the maximum rate of 6% – but not much interest was paid and by the time the ledger was closed, Haggatt owed £360 odd. By the time Speed made his will, the debt had risen to £690 of which £230 was unpaid interest (technically allowing foreclosure); but Speed forgave the interest on condition the principal was paid.

In 1686 Speed put £400 into Lamboll's malting business, as a partnership share not a loan. This must have been at Lamboll's suggestion, for it was geographically and occupationally remote from Speed's interests. When this proved totally unproductive, and Lamboll unable to repay it, it was converted into a mortgage at 5%. Meanwhile further money was lent him and Lamboll also owed on rents for Reading property which he was supposed to be collecting for Mary. Eventually Lamboll owed nearly £700 which was paid off, apparently by the sale of some of his own property, though not to Speed (ff. 109.5, 131.1, 147.6).

The only other important family loan was £327 outstanding on mortgage to Martha Gay (appendix A Marriage 3) at the beginning of the Ledger period, which was paid off so quickly that the question of interest did not arise. Another £115 lent her over the next few years – without interest – was simply written off in 1686. Perhaps she died (ff. 32.1, 32.2).

There were also small payments made on behalf the apprenticeships of Richard and James Speed, sons of Richard Speed mariner, deceased – great-nephews presumably. Although the word loan was not used, the Debtor balances in their names were carried forward in 1690, as was the £36 which had been advanced their father before his death (ff. 26.1, 94.7, 94.8, 117.3). But again the Will cancelled these obligations.

6.2.2 Clients

Speed frequently lent to people who regarded him as in some sense a patron (as Anthony Wood described his position among the Bristol Quakers).⁷⁷ Most of these loans were small and documented with no more than 'Cash lent him' in the Ledger. The expectation was presumably that they would be repaid when the borrower was able and no doubt informal promises were made. Moreover, they could often be repaid, in part at least, by services subsequently rendered – it looks as though Speed would, rather sensibly, find occasion to get small works done by people who owed him a few pounds. Even if these debts were not paid off, Speed never enforced them. But generally a second loan made when the first was still outstanding was more likely to be supported by a note or an IOU. Constant borrowers like the Spoores, father and son, who were also tenants, were on bill/bond status from the opening of the ledger. They made some repayments and paid some interest, but in effect maintained borrowings of over £100 throughout the ledger years (ff. 30.3, 31.7, 52.6, 69.8, 151.4, 154.4, 158.5, 176.1, 176.2).

Another borrower in this category was Thomas Lutterell of Clevedon (not a tenant but a country neighbour) who owed £10 on bond before the ledger opened, and £20 with several years of unpaid interest when it closed (ff. 25.1, 97.4). Then there was John Massinger the clothier and a major supplier of stockings. Speed assisted him in legal proceedings and progressively advanced him some£200 to be paid off in Stockings: interest was never mentioned (f. 163.1). An example of a quasi-family link was the assistance given to the Taylor family. Dennis Taylor had been apprenticed to Speed's brother John. After John's death, Speed, helped the Taylors to bring in a barrel of sugar and made small loans which were written off either in the ledger period or in the Will (ff 11.1, 88.5, 179.1).

Of course we cannot know what requests for a loan Speed may have turned down. But such as they are, these loans have a benign face. Far from being a loan-shark, Speed seems to have been discharging a social obligation, what was expected of a wealthy patron, a sort of richesse oblige.⁷⁸

A unique loan was afforded Peter Mewes, the Bishop of Bath & Wells: £150 lent in June 1684, to be repaid in October but £50 was still outstanding at the end of 1690, yet no interest was ever charged (f. 78.1). No other connection between the men is known. Possibly Speed found or hoped for some value from being of service to a man in high place.

6.3 Business

Most of Speed's sales were made on credit terms. But with frequent associates like Blackwell, Day, Gibbs and Scrope, there was frequent lending as well as frequent dealing; and Speed's accounts will not tell you whether the £60 a man paid today was in part settlement of the goods he had bought last week or the money he had borrowed the week before. It was simply part of the running account. But when the account ran too long one way, the outstanding amount might be upgraded to an interest-bearing loan or a bond.

The situation was further complicated when a borrower deposited goods for sale as security. The loan became in effect an advance on sales. Speed kept only the amount advanced, returning any surplus to the borrower/principal – see the mysterious soap affair, 3.2.4 above.

⁷⁸ C. Muldrew, 'The Culture of Reconciliation: community and the settlement of economic disputes in early modern England' Historical Journal 39 (1996) 915–942: 929.

The general trend of Business Credit is downward as one would expect from the cut-back in his trade, but the reductions do not seem proportionate – testimony to the long credit granted, and the longer patience with non-payment.

6.3.1 The normal course of business

Most transactions were attested primarily by a bundle of notes, memoranda, invoices and so on, and some perhaps by no original paperwork at all. Both parties would try to bring all together in their ledgers, and there was a patent will to reconcile these rather than dispute differences. 'ballance of theire acct current agreeable to theire own acct sent mee per Robt Massinger' as Speed noted (f. 111.1D December). Where they did not, the matter could be sorted by conference 'Cooperidge and cash as per severall noates of his widowes Mary Wasbrow, this day evened betwixt us as per Journal book fol 117 at large appeareth'; or 'ballance of his former acct adjusted betwixt us in Bristoll' (ff. 28.3C, 131.1D).⁷⁹ At a pinch, better write off the difference rather than quarrel e.g. 'for ...errors that I can By no meanes finde, for friendship sake I here charge that wee might close all accts to this 27th day of October 1685', writing off nearly £5 (f. 85.4C).

Sometimes with larger transactions, dates were set down for payment. Even where no date was specified originally, there was an expected norm of repayment. ⁸⁰ But it was a forbearing norm. and nobody was ever held to the day of promised settlement, even if stated. But when Edward Roy of Dorchester took over three years to settle an account with him, Speed charged him interest for the last 18 months – and even then Speed was left out of pocket (ff. 5.4, 44.2, 62.3). When Thomas Day, a frequent wine trade associate, allowed a trade debt incurred in April 1683 to remain unpaid for some 18 months, Speed charged interest but only for the last 9 months. In 1688, Speed lent him £100 on a deposit of gold for some three months and charged no interest. But in 1689, he lent £50 again on a deposit of gold, and charged interest for the nine months it was outstanding, though he then remitted the interest charge – it had been in effect only a gentle hint that the time for an account to remain unsettled had been passed, even between close associates (ff. 70.5, 150.5, 161.2).

Jonathan Blackwell, another wine trade associate, was also another frequent debtor. He was not usually charged interest. In fact when Blackwell actually paid interest on two occasions in 1683, Speed credited this direct to P& L, rather than to Blackwell – an indication that it had not been expected. He may have explained as much at the time – Blackwell never offered interest again. In November 1685, John Blackwell's outstanding debit was converted to two bills payable in four and seven months, but no interest was ever charged though in fact the bills were not honoured at the due date (ff. 85.4, 85.5).

6.3.2 Enforcement

Several debts which had been brought down from the previous Ledger were solemnly carried forward to the next, without a single entry in between, and with no apparent

⁷⁹ I believe that the so-called Account Book of Anthony Varder 1697–1713 (BRO AC/B/64) is the office copy of statements of account sent to associates for just this purpose.

⁸⁰ Or not in the Ledger. Invoices might well have carried the equivalent of today's 'Terms strictly 30 days nett' – and to as little purpose.

attempt to enforce payment. Ten years was not enough to make a debt either desperate or actionable. This was not from want of remedy: the Quaker refusal to take oaths does not seem to have hindered their going to law. Speed himself had fought and lost a claim for lord's rent by Henry Winter (ff. 38.4D March). His kinsmen Edward Martindale and William Rogers both Quakers, had actually gone to law with each other.

But he was slow to go to law for debts. Just how slow is illustrated by the case of Arthur Bramley and John Briscoe. He took legal proceedings against them in 1688 on an unpaid bond and they eventually paid up, with arrears of interest and costs, in 1689. But their bond dated from 1659. Speed had waited thirty years before taking such a step (f. 12.4). It looks as though Speed regarded the law as the appropriate arbiter of disputes over property, but that in commercial dealings he reckoned to avoid even the dispute, let alone the law-suit.

Thomas Scrope provides an instance of the ultimate sanction might be invoked. They had been close for many years, see 5.5 above. But in 1683 Speed brought together various outstanding matters in one new account (f. 75.1). The first entry is a debit of £100 'money I was to have received from him with his brother Edward Scrope, but did not receive it.' Some of Scrope's credits are treated to sceptical comments: 'which I cannot say is due'; 'for money he saith is due to him.' An outstanding loan to Scrope and Gibbs had been repaid as to the principal but short by some £70 (four years interest) as calculated by Speed. The final balance was a deficit of £93 odd. Speed simply wrote it off. No further business of any kind was done between him and Scrope, or not in the Ledger period; and Scrope is not mentioned in his will.

Scrope was still alive, so it looks like a deliberate severance. Why? Scrope had been associated with the Bristol branch of the Rye House plotters, though never charged. His son was known to be still amongst the radical Protestants plotting in Holland.⁸¹ But if Speed decided that Scrope was a man it was impolitic to know, he should have made the break earlier, and could safely have renewed the association after the Glorious Revolution.

The tone of the final account suggests that Speed had accumulated a sense of Scrope's failure to live up to the standards of a personal relationship, rather than to the terms of a contract. His response was not to go to law, but simply to write off the amount due and sever the relationship. The language in which he did so is aggrieved, rather than aggressive. This attitude and the underlying norms will be discussed at more length below (7.3.4).

7 PORTRAIT OF A MERCHANT

7.1 Success

Over the 9 years of the ledger, Speed earned nearly £550 a year, a little over half from trading and the rest from lending and property. This is well above the £400 a year which Gregory King regarded as the norm for overseas merchants. 82 Taking into account that

Table 4 Speed's Net Earnings and Expenditure 1681–1690 83

King's figures must have derived mainly from London, where earnings were much higher that in the outports, it is clear that even in these declining years, Speed was a very successful businessman. He spent nearly half of this income, and if there was nothing conspicuous about his consumption, it was at any rate very comfortable.⁸⁴

The savings he invested, mainly in property and in mortgages. So a nominal net worth of some £11,500 when the ledger opened had become over £14,000 by the end. He was worth a little less when he died, say £12,500. Perhaps he had speculated unsuccessfully in stocks in the '90s, but the greater part of the apparent loss was very likely in debts, carried forward rather optimistically in 1690 but never realised.

Surveying the century as a whole, Grassby says that 'In Bristol estates ranged from £1,000 to £2,000; the average personalty of Merchant Venturers was £919'. 85 His examples from other provincial towns indicate that an estate of over £3,000 was unusual. 86 His citations are based on inventories at death which exclude real property. In these terms, if Speed had died in 1690, his personal estate, excluding property and discounting most of the Debts and the Stock, would been somewhere between £5,000 and £6,000. This would put him on a level with major Bristol merchants such as John Whitson or Joseph Jackson. 87 It can safely be said that Speed was a very prosperous man for the provinces.

7.2 Speed's Qualities

One factor in Speed's success was longevity. Then as now, other things being equal, wealth accumulated in the hands of the elderly, and Speed lived eighty years. This also gave him time to wind up and settle his affairs rather than be caught by death at an awkward juncture.

Speed was clearly an intelligent man and a quick study. His first marriage offered him the chance of picking up the merchant's skills, including accountancy; but it was for him to profit by it. He kept his faculties to the end: his last writings are as sharp as ever, in every sense of the word. In fact, they reveal a man of some asperity, which could have been a handicap in the commercial culture of the time, had he not kept it under control.

He was a careful trader, risk-averse and untempted by great coups. He kept large liquid balances, paid his own bills promptly, and never, to judge by the Wharfage

Books, traded on the scale of some of his contemporaries. This caution debarred him from great gains but it kept him out of financial trouble. Within this relatively restricted compass, he was prepared to take pains, and the apparent contrast with the short period of Jahzeel's management shows what a difference it made that a merchant should mind his business.

His care and caution, and particularly his beforehandedness in meeting liabilities must have enhanced whatever credit he had originally acquired from the Yeamans connection. Apart from paying his bills, he was ready to take back or discount unsatisfactory goods, to compromise on reckonings, to be patient with debtors and tenants, and to work in cooperation with others. If he was not casual, nor was he grasping – neither Antonio nor Shylock. These qualities owed as much to the commercial culture in which he operated as to his personality, as discussed below (7.3.4).

He seems to have been honest even in his dealings with the authorities. All the imports in the Ledger can be found in the Wharfage Books. Today we might not expect illegal dealings to enter the official accounts anyway, but Jones has shown that Bristol merchants in the sixteenth century had no such false modesty and readily entered the details of consignments shipped out clandestinely by lighter, and of bungs to Customs officers. At that time, outward consignments were the most smuggled, but by the Seventeenth Century it was inward duties which were most evaded. In 1690, a number of Bristol merchants compounded for £2,700, admitting charges of substantial evasion of duty on tobacco. Nearly 40% of this total was paid by leading Quakers. Speed's absence from the list is not conclusive of his innocence, for he had not dealt in tobacco on his own account since 1684; but he paid the duty then and again when clearing tobacco on commission in 1687/8 (ff. 78.4, 147.5). Perhaps he was the 'one merchant in the book you will find very honest'.

7.3 Values

7.3.1 Protestant Capitalist?

This survey of Speed's business activities has brought out many ways in which he was not imbued with the Spirit of Capitalism. As a merchant, his business did not involve the employment of free labour, on which Weber laid stress.⁹¹ More importantly, his accounts did not even make that 'separation of business from personal life' which Weber regarded as allied to rational bookkeeping, and did not permit calculated profit maximisation.

We do not have Speed's diaries or his injunctions to his apprentices. But while his ledger contains several remarks expressive of his attitudes, there is not a single reference to Providence, or rendering of thanks for his good fortune – omissions all the more apparent by contrast with writings which show him to be as ready as the next man with sententious sanctimony. So far from pursuing his calling to the end, he made careful arrangements for semi-retirement when still vigorous if elderly. He was not particularly abstemious himself and allowed his son drinking money even in his disgrace. He was hardly the stereotypical Protestant or puritan businessman. 92

7.3.2 Quakerism?

The Ledger likewise contains no hint that Speed was a Quaker, and several indications that he was not a good one. The months of the year were given their pagan names. Nobody in its pages was described as a Friend, though several were. On the other hand, the great of the land were given their worldly titles without qualification or disclaimer – if anything one might fancy that he relished having an Earl of Bristol, a Bishop of Bath & Wells, a Sir Thomas Strode and a Lady Ann Paulett on his books. There is never a reference to any donation to Quaker collections, though he not only paid his poor rates but contributed to the relief of Huguenots (f. 119.1). That he paid his rates for the militia means little: the Bristol Quakers had complained about the amount they were assessed for but had made no stand on principle. But he unblinkingly recorded that he paid his tithe on his Clevedon land while it was in his hands (f. 32, 3).

Despite some claims by Quakers themselves, it may be doubted how far there were any especially Quaker business ethics. That traders should be honest and prudent were commonplaces of commercial precept, not peculiar to Quakers. Fox made much of the Quaker's refusal to haggle over prices, as an extension of plain speaking. But this can have meant little to the wholesaler who was used to agreeing with his customers the mix of money down and money at three or six months which would suit both. Some Quakers gave up trading in goods which they considered vain or wrongful in use. Men like Stout and Pike record instances of particular deals they turned down for Truth's sake. In the absence of such record we cannot tell if Speed refrained from dealing in slaves or firearms for this reason.⁹³

Early modern Quakers have been claimed as instances of a frequently observed occurrence, that minorities barred from public life or social esteem thrive the more in those commercial fields still open to them. ⁹⁴ Speed's becoming a Quaker certainly did debar him from public life, at any rate for three decades after the Restoration. This was something of a relief: the Council was a distraction and a year as sheriff or mayor a real burden. On the other hand, fines and imprisonment were not conducive to the carrying on of business. All in all, he would perhaps sooner have been exposed to the full burdens of civic office than to exile and loss of estate under the laws against non-conformity. And socially the Quakers were by no means an outcast group. Speed was kin to many of the magistracy of Bristol, he continued to associate with such people, albeit more of the dissenting persuasions, and to take his place, when he chose, in the Merchant Venturers Hall.

⁹¹ M Weber, The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism New York 2003, 21-2

⁹² Perhaps the stereotype is at fault. Sommerville has argued that many Protestants disparaged the making of money ('Anti-Puritan Work Ethic' Journal of British Studies 20, 1981, 70–81) and Mascuch that diarists at least generally perceived themselves as 'making the family secure' rather than relentlessly pursuing either profit or salvation ('Social mobility and middling self-identity: the ethos of British autobiographers' Social History 22 (1995) 45–61: 55).

7.3.3 Family

Family, rather than faith, seems to have provided the framework and the dynamic of Speed's business. Family supplied, and then sapped, his trading capital. It was the deaths of his brother and brother-in-law that brought him to the peak of his trading. If he ran down his business in the later '70s, it was not because times were bad, but because he was planning to take early semi-retirement. If he switched his capital into property in his last years, this was not because rent offered better returns than trade, but because that was the best means of transmitting it to his surviving children – both daughters. Speed's business history seems to confirm the conclusion of Grassby, that the seventeenth-century business was, in the fullest sense, a family firm.⁹⁵

7.3.4 Friendship

There has been a perception that the early modern period saw the impersonal legalistic contract become the mode of business relationships. Even Grassby, who places the businessman firmly in the household, accepts that contract became the 'organising principle' of seventeenth-century England. Speed's dealings, whether as trader, lender, or landlord, seem rather to have taken place within a social context and a culture of norms and expectations which were more important than formal legal rights and obligations. The model that Speed and his associates, his creditors, his tenants and his neighbours, had reference to was Friendship.

The early modern 'friend' did not refer particularly to a person whose company you enjoyed, but to one who had a benevolent regard to your interests. ⁹⁷ That was the language in which businessmen wrote to each other; and the basis on which the tenant or creditor would expect forbearance, and neighbours look for assistance whether in transmitting money to London or in borrowing. Of course the language might mask behaviour which was less than friendly, but then the language of corporate management today often masks conduct which has nothing to do with shareholder interests.

The friendship involved was not the absolute and unconditional friendship of which Montaigne wrote, but rather the 'common friendships' with which he contrasted it, where 'a man must march with the bridle of wisdom and precaution in his hand.'98 It was compatible with, indeed largely consisted in, a strong sense of obligations in each direction, and a conscious reckoning of how far they were being honoured or dishonoured.99 Honour was not confined to the landed; there were many sorts of honour.100 For those in commerce, Honour was implicated in the notion of Credit on which so much depended.101 It was not for nothing that one spoke of a bill being 'honoured'.102 The credit of a man was not just the financial amount for which he could be trusted: his very manhood was embodied in the notion of his solvency and, reaching back to family again, his ability to maintain his household honourably, paying his way.103 And beyond that it was the moral credit balance he had acquired by fair dealing with others.104 We may say of commercial honour what Donagan says of military, it 'was professional, moral, utilitarian and a force for social stability. It was pragmatic as well as idealistic.'105

It should hardly be surprising that the well-known and important ethic of friendship should be applied to commercial dealings. After all, those dealings were personal and conducted between persons who did not draw a barrier between the household and the firm. Friends were in a sense social capital to be invested in. 106 The language of friendship was an appropriate mean between the constant evocations of piety and religious commandment mocked in the stage Puritan and the cold legalese of contract; with enough of morality in it, and enough of obligation, to bridge that gap and to serve the purposes of a civil society. And even if it often masked real sentiment and motive, it was not merely a matter of words, but of conduct. For example it demanded that a man should not only fulfill his obligations but do so cheerfully; and call for fulfillment pleasantly and tactfully. It went with easy social intercourse: not for nothing was the coffee-shop a centre of commerce.

Friendship and the obligations of friendship, rather than legal or religious concepts, created the expectations to which men responded and against which they judged others. Cooperation rather than competition, convention rather than contract, reconciliation rather than conflict, were the norms. When these were not met, the reaction was personal reproach not litigation, as Speed showed in breaking with Scrope.¹⁰⁷ Yet in other contexts Speed was inclined to be disputatious, harshly uncompromising and self-righteous. His self-justifying pamphlet of 1690 has the same vituperative tone as those of the 1650s.¹⁰⁸ His last surviving letter has the same withering dismissal of the legal claims of his opponent as his first.¹⁰⁹ But the ethos of Friendship in business was strong enough to temper this rather harsh and unforgiving temperament.

CONCLUSION

Speed's ledger gives us not only a business history but the portrait of a successful and respected businessman: cautious, honest, and fair; observing the conventions of commercial friendship and ready to do favours; concerned above all with the interests of his family. It is a portrait he would have been happy to own.

Privately the man who was always so welcome in the homes of his step-daughter in Reading and his daughter in London must have been agreeable enough; and his widow, Mary, who survived him by 17 years, asked to be buried 'in the same grave that my dear husband was buried in' (TNA Family sig 56 PR11/568).

TRANSCRIPTION

The general policy has been to present the ledger as close to the original as may be intelligible to the non-specialist reader. Subject to errors in reading, the transcript is literal. EXCEPT:

Characters

Abbreviations which are no longer current are given a modern form if there is one. Thus li is rendered as £ or lb.; et cet. as etc.; ct. as cwt.; 9br or Nov.br as Nov.; Compay, compny, compy all as Co.; and Sa. as St.

Y for thorn is always printed as th.

Abbreviations that have no modern form are usually expanded: eg $Exch^a$ is Exchange; and comission (with contraction mark), commission. The expansions are not marked typographically and no attempt is made to reproduce or indicate contraction marks or superscripted characters. Pd. is left, where used, for paid; and recd. for all abbreviations of received.. Abbreviations for what, which, with and suchlike are expanded throughout. Pt. for part is always expanded.

Christian names have been left as abbreviated, including Xpher for Christopher; with the exception of Jn^o which is given as John throughout (the Ledger has both, apparently at random.)

Place names are modernised where there is a standard modern form (Lixboa beomes Lisbon, Exon, Exeter) but Virginea will not confuse anyone and rather than choose between Jerez and sherry, Xerie(s) stays

Mr. for Mister is left so, but expanded for the Master of a ship.

[?] or [conjectured reading] are used for missing or illegible text and — for spaces left in the original (often first names). [sic] is not used – all errors are meant to be those of the accountant, and some are annotated. Crossed out words or figures have not been transcribed but have been noted if they seem to have any interest.

Punctuation

Commas and apostrophes are used as in the original. Other stops, where given, are rendered according to today's usage, but the practice of leading the narrative across to the figures with a line of dots and dashes – not reproduced – can makes it difficult to tell when stops are intended. Figures (not sums of money) are often underlined and both figures and sums of money are often followed by a dot: no attempt has been made to reproduce these features.

Capitals in the original are reproduced as far as they are discernible (Speed's initial M and m are very alike), but ff is printed F.

Layout

The layout has been slightly simplified to save space. In the original, there are two separate columns on the left of the page for the date, which are here merged as one. Similarly there is a separate column for thousands of Ryals which has been merged here.

In the Stockings Accounts, Jahzeel used a convenient set of columns for Pairs, Shillings and Pence (per dozen) which Speed abandoned but which is adopted here throughout in these very repetitive entries. Similar space-saving tabulation has been adopted for the repetitive entries in the account for Rice (f. 95.1).

The column for references to the counter-entries in the Ledger has been retained but the references are annotated where they are incorrect or will not be found. Also, from folio 79, the Ledger provides a second column for what appear to be references to the pages of another account book, unspecified; and most though not all entries are given such a second reference. The practice suggests that, possibly as a consequence of Jahzeel's untrustworthiness, Speed may have taken to keeping duplicate accounts. But it is not easy to derive any information from the numbers given, and as they would take up space already crowded they have all been omitted.

These editorial procedures are perhaps not wholly consistent and may not have always been consistently followed. Fortunately the reader who wishes to examine the original orthography in detail may do so in the electronic images supplied on disc with this volume. The editor can at least plead that some inconsistency is fundamentally faithful to Speed's own practices; and will be happy if the outcome is an accounting document which would have been acceptable to him and intelligible to the modern reader.

Endnotes

- * These counter entries will not be found. The majority of the missing matches were in the lost or badly damaged folios from 186. But there are some 126 which were simply not made where they should have been. Almost invariably the missing entry should have been posted to Profit & Loss, or Cash, or Speed's bank account with Isaac Heming; while the entry that is made ensures that dealings with others are accurately recorded. (Not surprisingly, Speed's own record of dealings with Heming is often amiss, but is simply adjusted from the account supplied by Heming see the last entry of f. 90.1D)
- ¹ The accountant, Jahzeel, was going to open the new ledger with an account devoted to all the Balances carried forward from the closed Ledger D, but decided simply to open each individual account with its closing balance from D, as the start of the Ledger proper on f. 1 shows.
- ² This is very clearly written as Sr Thomas, but the counter-entry gives no title (both entries by Jahzeel). The Thomas Walden who only took freedom in 1681 was never knighted, and I can find no reference to any such knight before him he would have been at least on the City Council. So I am inclined to put this down to Jahzeel's sense of humour: the two young men were cousins (see Appendix A Marriages 1 and 3).
- ³ The counter-entry in f. 42 has the John Frigate, not the Zant, both entries are by Jahzeel but they can hardly have been made at the same time or from a single Journal entry.
- ⁴ The counter-entry is actually in f. 96.1C
- ⁵ This is the first entry for a very mysterious transaction, see Introduction 3.2.4.
- ⁶ The Cash counter-entries give no clue as to these substantial payments. They are not misappropriations by Jahzeel, for they are not included in the account which Speed opened for these. All one can say is that Speed seems not to have regarded them as either extinguishing an obligation on his side or creating one on any other. Nevertheless it is just possible that the £500 is the money advanced on the Bainham mortgage (f. 48.6) and for some reason never so designated until it was paid off.
- ⁷ Very clearly written so. The accountant (Jahzeel) does at times use 'ffor', ie 'For' in this context but there is no other instance of 'effor' or apparent meaning in it, unless it should be a tiny phonetic pleasantry.
- ⁸ Presumably Martha Speed, who was keeping house at this time and to whom the Household Expenses in the previous entry would have been paid.
- ⁹ This would be the replacement of one of the lives, typically three, constituting the duration of a lease. It may have been occasioned by the death of Speed's wife Ann the previous year, perhaps replacing her with Mary Lamboll to whom he would be married two months later. The property involved cannot be identified, but Shuttleworth was Secretary to the Earl of Bristol and active in the Clevedon/Clapton area where Speed was building up his 'estate'.
- This is Robert Yate the elder, the father of Speed's cousin see Appendix A Marriages 1
- ¹¹ Very likely Speed's next-door neighbour Sara Hasell (Leech Topography 158)

- ¹² This famous Bristol figure was quite active in Bristol in the early 1680s, but the write-off may have followed his return to London.
- Thomas Lower was a prominent early Quaker, married to Margaret Fell's daughter Mary, amanuensis for much of George Fox's Journal and one of his literary executors.
- ¹⁴ There is regrettably nothing to identify whether this was the Isaac Newton; but the fact that it was written off in 1690, when Newton's star was ascendant, suggests that it was not. (Or was it that Newton as, briefly, MP for Cambridge University, was exempt from proceedings for debt?)
- ¹⁵ Stepsister of Jahzeel, that is see Appendix A Marriage 1
- ¹⁶ Erasmus Dole, pewterer, was an active Quaker of long standing.
- ¹⁷ The Tyntes were major land-owners in North Somerset, where their name survives in Tyntesfield House (now National Trust), the Gothic extravaganza built for the Victorian guano magnate, William Gibbs.
- ¹⁸ 'Then' is followed by what looks like 'vd', squeezed into the end of the line.
- ¹⁹ This is the only instance of an imputed, or opportunity, cost. No expenditure has been incurred: Speed is simply reckoning what the amount tied up in this property could have earned as a loan at interest. The property had earned only some £20 net over seven (not six) years. Bringing the lost interest into the account means that the property is worth less at the end of this account than at the beginning, has made a notional loss; and these calculations clearly show the reasoning behind his selling the property early in next year (f. 160.2).
- Joseph Jackson was a relatively undistinguished member of a leading merchant family. Miles Jackson had been one of the successful Council-sponsored candidates in the disputed election of 1654 in which Speed's brother-in-law John Haggatt and nephew George Bishop had been defeated.
- This is either Speed's elder brother, long since dead, or his son the mariner, also dead (c. 1678 PROB 4/11359) whose son, the sailor lad, Speed was still assisting. The claim is not mentioned in Speed's will, and may have in the interim been converted into ownership of the tenement in Colyton which Speed ultimately bequeathed back to the surviving Speeds there.
- ²² See Introduction 3.1.4
- ²³ This property (Nos 9 & 10 Small St: Leech Topography 156) had been left to the three daughters of Gabriel Sherman (see Appendix A Marriage 3). Speed had bought out the other shares.
- ²⁴ Almost certainly a mistake for Philip as in counter-entry and entry for April 30 below
- ²⁵ See Appendix A Marriage 2
- ²⁶ This is no. 18 Small Street (Leech Topography 158) which Speed had acquired in the late 1660s and which remained his home till his death. It was a substantial property, paying Hearth Tax on eight chimneys, backing on to the Gild Hall and leasing the cellars under it.
- 27 Richard Godwin seems to have been working for Speed on the country estate at Clapton.
- ²⁸ Another member of the Devon branch whom Speed had assisted

- 29 The Strodes were major gentry in Shepton Mallett, Somerset. Both Sir George and Thomas Strode were Sergeants-at-law
- 30 Step-son-in-law, see Appendix A Marriage 1
- Possibly William Ford sergemaker, a leading Quaker who supported William Rogers against George Fox (MMM I 200)
- ³² Probably the Quaker (MMM I 215)
- ³³ See Appendix A Marriage 2. James must be brother or other relation of Bridget Wallis, one of those from whom Speed had purchased the original holding at Clapton. A merchant, James seems to have gone to Spain, where Kekewich was asked to supply a certificate of his being alive for the benefit of his sister(s) f. 7.1
- The Winters were important landowners in north Somerset and Henry Winter was one of those from whom Speed purchased land for his Clapton estate. Winter had retained the right to Lords Rent at 32s a year and Speed disputed this at law and lost.
- These loans against stockings continue through to October 1689 (ff. 155.1, 163.1, 165.1) when Speed actually acquired the total of 1834 pairs. It is difficult to make sense of these transactions: if the actual stockings were deposited with Speed as stated, and only at the end 'taken to himself' why not buy them outright in the first place? It would make more sense if Massinger, unable to pursue his trade by reason of his entanglement at law with George Freman as shown in the preceding entries, had merely supplied IOUs for stockings which he ultimately redeemed, but this does not go with Speed's wording.
- ³⁶ I cannot place this cousin.
- ³⁷ Grandfather of George. D Freeman George Washington: a biography (London 1948) 30-31.
- ³⁸ That is, the City Treasury. See Introduction 3.1.3
- ³⁹ Another indication that in the early 80s, Speed was directly engaged in farming part of his Clapton estate.
- ⁴⁰ It looks as though Speed had been making progress payments as the work went on, and waited for completion before crediting the entire amount to his Clapton property. £280 odd see the credit opposite would have built a decent house but no way a mansion.
- ⁴¹ See Appendix A Marriage 3 The mortgage was possibly her share in the ship Resolution, see next account.
- ⁴² Speed is working from accounts from his Spanish factors in Spanish currency Appendix B Payment, currencies & bills.
- ⁴³ See Appendix B Payment, currencies & bills.
- Reproduced in the frontispiece. Note that the main amount has been carried forward from the previous ledger, and is now coolly written off to Profit & Loss. The presentation is designed impudently to advertise rather than conceal the transaction. For Speed's reaction, see f. 69.2 first line.
- ⁴⁵ The counter-entry is actually in f. 40.1C where it is dated 17th March, another example of the point that the Credit and Debit entries were often not posted at the same time.

- 46 It is not clear why Massinger, a principal hosier, buys these stockings. They might be rejects on quality grounds which he takes back, but the price is well below what he commonly sells for.
- ⁴⁷ I cannot find this place in any atlas but Richardson is a Londoner and in f. 117.7 a man otherwise unknown is paid for taking Wilmer's mare to Branford Wilmer being also a Londoner, so a London or Middlesex location seems indicated (there is a Bramford Rd in east Wandsworth.) f. 35.3
- ⁴⁸ Originally I valued my bill pronouns overwritten
- ⁴⁹ No other reference to this person can be found in the ledger.
- 50 In this single account, over just three months, Speed's nominal cash balance goes down from over £3000 to a few hundreds, where it remains for the succeeding three Cash folios. See Introduction 5.6.2.
- 51 What infuriating entries! See note 6
- ⁵² The counter-entry says Jahzeel Speed.
- ⁵³ The counter-entry is undoubtedly to the account of John Sandford, f.19.7
- There is no counter-entry in Wasbrow's account (f. 28.3) but this may have figured among the various notes 'evened betwixt us' in the last entry there, and all written off to Profit & Loss.
- 55 Given that this is in Jahzeel's hand, the semi-pun may have been intended
- ⁵⁶ 'Gentleman' at this time is usually a lawyer who had studied, or at least eaten his dinners, at one of the Inns of Court.
- ⁵⁷ The matching P&L entry notes that the mortgage dates from April 1682, consistently with the interest calculations. This may be linked to the entry on the Profit & Loss account f.8.1, April 10-12, where over £500 is simply marked as Cash paid sundrys (the counter-entry for Cash is no more forthcoming); but it is not easy to think why this mortgage should not have entered as such from the first.
- ⁵⁸ In fact the counter-entry is at f. 60.4
- ⁵⁹ This does not add up because, as the counter-entry shows, Speed has also charged for the 20 boxes
- In April 1685 some copper coolers were returned to Bristol and sold back to Badger for £29 14s 2d. At the same time, Speed bought some copper taches of him for £32 3s 6d, to go at Adventure in the Joseph to Nevis. Speed in effect owed Badger £2 9s 4d.
 - In June, Speed showed a Cash receipt for £29 8s 11d from Badger (ie 5s 3d less than he owed) and a Cash payment of £32 3s 6d to him, a net payment of £2 14s 7d Cash. But the Cash paid was debited, incorrectly, direct to the Joseph adventure, rather than to Badger's account. This meant that Speed had Credited both Cash and Badger with the same single Debit, all for £32 3s 6d. In book-keeping practice he should have Debited Badger with the Cash paid him, and rectified the original misattribution in the Cash account by a Debit to the Joseph adventure and a matching Credit to Badger's account (or altered the original Cash Credit to show By Badger, rather than By Adventure). He should also have credited Badger's account with the Cash received and with a rebate of 5s 3d allowed him (chargeable to P&L).

Instead he saved himself time and trouble by posting neither the Cash received nor the Cash paid to Badger's account, but simply Crediting this account with the nominal difference of £2 9s 4d and charging that to P&L. This did his business, in that it correctly showed the value of stock sold from the Owners Endeavour and purchased for the Joseph; and cleared the Badger account. It also left, correctly, the net payout of £2 14s 7d from Cash. But the posting of £2 9s 4d as a credit to P&L was a nonsense, or would have been if the P&L account had held any real significance for Speed.

- ⁶¹ The accountant of the third hand is in error here the Credit side is clear and agrees with the entry in f. 33.1
- 62 In fact this is credited to Scrope's account f. 75.1
- 63 More of the mysterious transaction See Introduction 3.2.4
- This and the next three accounts are part of the mysterious affair of the soap Introduction 3.2.4
- 65 The counter-entry is actually one of several merged as Sundry accounts f. 83.1D for 3 June
- 66 Benjamin Cole was a Reading Quaker and one of the leaders of the anti-Fox faction there.
- ⁶⁷ Actually f. 73.1D June 84
- ⁶⁸ See Appendix B Payment, currencies & bills.
- ⁶⁹ This is very plainly written but should be 157. (236 is probably the second cross reference see Transcription notes— not here reproduced.)
- ⁷⁰ See note on Appendix B Payment, currencies & bills.
- ⁷¹ See n. 34.
- Unmistakably written so but obviously wrong: the Debit total shows 10s, agreeing with the entry in Rishton's account f. 58.8
- ⁷³ This is probably Martha see f. 60.9. There is no relevant entry for Mary.
- Whiston's Remembrancer was the proper title but Avizoe was the generic term for this sort periodical with current prices, exchange rates and commercial news
- ⁷⁵ See Introduction 6.3.2.
- ⁷⁶ Again the third accountant makes an apparently obvious error
- 77 See Appendix A Marriage 1
- $^{78}\,$ See Appendix A Marriage 2
- ⁷⁹ This probably a mistake for the Owners Adventure, see the counter-entry f. 80.6D
- 80 The counter entries show payments to Edward. See f. 107 Credit entry between 7 and 14 January: 'Wm. alias Edward Iffe'.
- 81 See Appendix A Marriage 1
- ⁸² A coral, probably for Alice or Speed Heming to cut her teeth on (Appendix A Marriage 1)
- 83 Actually f. 113.4D
- Port? The wines appear to be French. See OED, Port n⁷: 1691 N. LUTTRELL Diary in Brief Hist. Relation State Affairs (1857) II. 314 English ships that went to Bourdeaux and took in wine, and after sailed to port O Porto, and then came home, pretending it to be port.

- 85 Every subsequent entry states that the person named "is debtor for". In order to match debits and credits as Speed did, but without wasting space, I have replace this phrase with a colon.
- ⁸⁶ Speed gives each person two lines: one for [name] per Contra, and one for By Cash etc. I have elided these two for the reasons given in the previous note.
- 87 This entry is undated but made in the third hand so presumably in 1690. The accounting seems correct: Jordan is one of the buyers in the Raisins account f. 136.2C which agrees with the amounts charged to those named there. But perhaps he was mistakenly charged with a purchase made by some other person no longer to be identifed.
- There is some confusion here between old and new style year dating, but comparison with the Portbury account (f. 20.3) indicates that the tenancy began in September 1683 and that the last entry here is for the years to March 1688/9
- 89 That is Clevedon in Somerset, not Clifton in Gloucestershire.
- This or a similar phrase, repeated every time the friend is mentioned, suggests that Speed was irked by the anonymity.
- ⁹¹ This is the man who had been foremost in inciting informers and leading gangs of vigilantes in the enforcement of the Conventicle Act: see Introduction 3.1.3.
- 92 This entry duplicates the one below, where the consignment is correctly assigned to the Rebecca
- ⁹³ There is no corresponding entry for Thiery in the Stockings account
- 94 The overcorrected entry looks like 110 but this cannot be and 00 gives the correct total.
- 95 John Barnard's son became Sir John Barnard, financial adviser to Robert Walpole
- ⁹⁶ In fact the counter-entry for the landing part of this, 1s 6d, and the charge for freight below £2 3s 6d are credited to cash on f. 119.1 July 29 and the 2s for wharfage does not seem to have been credited anywhere
- 97 See Introduction 4.2.2.
- 98 Blagdon, Somerset
- ⁹⁹ The three items above have also been posted to Cash f. 119.1, but are now included in the total posted to Profit & Loss.
- 100 In fact the counter-entry is at f. 123.5, the continuation of f. 116.3 'for want of roome'
- 101 It had not in fact been paid see Introduction 4.2.2
- ¹⁰² His now wife is actually Mary, but the previous one was Ann: a senior moment.
- 103 Whether s or d I cannot relate the charge to the particulars
- This is a duplicate of the entry next above. Only one appears in the Clark account
- 105 I cannot make out these squiggles: nails were commonly sold by the hundred retail or the hundredweight wholesale for export.
- i.e. decoration, not courage
- Thomas Day soapmaker had previously bought wine, and paid for it. But as Mayor he seems not to have volunteered payment, nor Speed to have pressed for it.

- ¹⁰⁸ Perhaps Calne in Wiltshire I can find no likely candidate in Gloucestershire.
- This aborted entry appears in full as the first in the next Stocking account
- ¹¹⁰ It is not clear why the balance of this account is written off rather than carried forward to the next as is usual with Stockins Accounts before and after.
- Duck Lane lies between the Pithay and Needless Gate, less than a quarter of a mile from Speed's home and in the parish of St John's.
- ¹¹² Appendix A Marriage 4
- ¹¹³ The counter-entry shows that this should be John Bartlett.
- This entry is one of the first in the hand of the new accountant who took over and eventually closed the Ledger, the next in Speed's and the next in the accountant's again. This suggests a transitional handing over period, and the counter-entry in the Benjamin Cole account (f. 147.2) would place it around March 1689/90. But the counter-entries also afford a striking example of the irregularity of ledger posting (also f. 169.4D and f. 180.1)
- Jahzeel was already dead yet this account is carried forward, not closed off: see Introduction 3.2.2
- ff. 185 and 186 have been reconstructed from the scraps which were pasted rather haphazardly into the journal when it was restored. When Debits and Credits are matched to the same nominal accounts, much can be supplied by reference to counter entries, or by the other half in entries for 'my half' and the like.

APPENDIX A MARRIAGES

SMALL CAPS: PERSONS MENTIONED IN THE LEDGER Italics: Quakers

These tables include only those mentioned in the Ledger and those through whom they are related to Speed. Siblings are orderd by convenience not seniority.

APPENDIX B PAYMENT, CURRENCY & BILLS

A grasp of currencies and coinages, nominal and metal values, exchange rates and methods of settlement was one of the most important parts of a merchant's training. The most useful guide I have found is McCusker Money & Exchange in Europe & America 1600 – 1776 (Macmillan 1978).

In England, accounts were kept in Pounds, Shillings and Pence: £ or Li, s and d. The Pound was 240 d, or 20s at 12d per shilling. Legal tender for payments comprised Brass or Copper Farthings ($^{1}\!4d$) and Halfpence; and silver Pennies, Twopences (or half groats), Threepences, Fourpences (Groats), Sixpences, Half Crowns (2s 6d) and Crowns (5s). Some gold coins denominated in guineas (Half, One, Two and Five) together with much older gold items (Crown, Double Crown, and Unite) still circulated but as the Ledger shows were treated as so much precious metal rather than as tender for nominal values.

The acute shortage of coins aggravated itself: those who could accumulated considerable hoards and Speed himself kept £'000s in cash on his premises. It was alleviated for the poorer sort by the private issue of farthing tokens, and for the business and landed community by the use of credit. The Bristol Fairs – St James (July 25th) or St Pauls (January 25th) were often specified as the settlement date. See for example f. 45.6, 60.4 and 126.4; though the last shows also the latitude in practice – the final settlement took place piecemeal over some seven months after the date specified. Mutiple settlements at a fair could be made by rapid circulation of rellatively small amount of cash. Cash calls were further reduced where two or more mutually indebted persons could set off debts and need only settle the outstanding differences between them.

A bill was a written acknowledgment of debt, usually with a date set for payment. A bill of exchange involved three parties: the drawer who ordered the drawee to pay a specified sum to the payee by a set date. It was common for landowners and business men in the country to keep credit accounts with London bankers (often merchants, goldsmiths or lawyers), drawing and accepting bills on London; and people with such accounts would often accommodate their associates by paying them cash in return for a bill on London (in effect cashing their cheques) or taking their cash in exchange for a London credit. Assuming that the drawer and drawee were men of credit, these could readily be reassigned by the payee to satisfy his own creditors, and become in themselves a currency of settlement. As with cheques and bank transfers today, the amounts settled by the drawing and exchange of bills to transfer credit many times exceeded those made in cash.

Foreign exchange rates fluctuated, as they do today, but within the narrow compass set by the intrinsic metal content of coinage plus or minus the costs of transporting specie: the french écu could not for long cost more in sterling than it would cost to send its silver equivalent to Paris.

The main French accounting units were the Livre Tournois, (20 Sous or 240 deniers to the Livre) and the Écu (3 Livres or 60 sous) (Speed occasionally mixes the two up, citing the exchange rate for the Livre when he mean the Écu.) It was with the écu that Speed made his first trial of remittance, that is paying one Jaques Gonsailes in London for a bill drawn on his, Gonsailes', correspondent or banker in Bordeaux in favour of the Kirbys (f. 64.2D, f. 90.1C). Speed calculated that he had saved against the current exchange rate (about 55d per écu) and continued remitting especially to France.

In Spain, there was a considerable difference between the effective metallic value of the coinage and its nominal or Vellon denomination – scarcely half as much. (See f. 131.2 where the fall in the Ryal Vellon cost Speed about 30% the sterling value of his nominal payment.) There were 8 Reales (Ryals for Speed) to the Peso or Piece of Eight, and 34 Maravedis (Mervides) to the Real; and the exchange rate in the 80s was fairly stable at 50-52d per Peso (metal content or plate value). As the ledger shows, Speed often took his returns from Spanish sales in Plate or silver bullion. Technically this was an illegal export but ships including those of the Royal Navy were generally happy to carry it for a fee.

The English transatlantic colonies had their own currencies but as the planters were normally in debt to English suppliers or bankers (often the same people), they could expect to pay a premium for bills of exchange on London. These would in any case only be met by the proceeds of sugar exports, at fluctuating prices. They were also short of specie. Sugar itself, used as a currency in the Caribbean, was often used (at a fixed £ sterling value) as the basis of accounting and of periodic settlement between planter and merchant as in f. 33.1D and in further transactions. INDEX

All references are to the Ledger folio and account in which the entry occurs, so that 10.3 refers to the 3rd account on folio 10. This locates the entry more quickly than a page reference, since most accounts are less than a page long, though this advantage is lost in long accounts like Cash and Profit & Loss which run to more than a printed page. It also corresponds more closely than page referencing would to the cross-referencing in the Ledger text – see below. And it has made it possible to prepare the Index independently of the printing format, so applying equally to the digital version.

If the reference is to an account which deals mainly or extensively with the item concerned it is printed in bold, so, 10.3, and applies to both the Debit and the Credit sides of that account. For incidental references within an account, the account is referenced in the same way but not in bold and is followed by D[ebit] or C[redit] indicating the side of the account concerned, with a bracketed number of entries to be found if more than one. So 10.3C(2) means that there are two entries to be found on the Credit side of account no 3 on folio 10.

This is a double-entry ledger, so every entry should have a counter entry, which the researcher may wish to consult – the two entries are often slightly different. Normally no extra index reference is needed for this, because it should be supplied in the Ledger itself. For example, if a merchant X is debited with the cost of items purchased from a consignment of wines, the Dr narrative will read To Wines, etc, and the column to the left of the £ s d will give the folio number of the particular Wines account in question, making it fairly easy to find the counter Credit entry, By Merchant X etc, with a reference back to the folio of the Merchants account. Counter-entries therefore are not given in the Index (and the method used in compiling it has meant that the reference given is usually to the Debit entry, unless there is clearly more information in the Credit.) But some counter entries are missing and the alleged cross–references in the text are marked *; and others are cross-referenced wrongly, in which case there is a note directing the reader to the correct counter entry.

All persons are indexed under the heading Persons and all vessels under Vessels. Merchandise is indexed by item or kind, except items for Household or Personal use, which are grouped under these headings. Speed's properties are grouped separately from Places, under Properties of TS.

All headwords are in today's spelling.
